Profits Tax Repeal Favored 13-8 by Senate Committee; Roosevelt Insists on Pay Bill

Senate Group Widens Scope Of Inquiry in D. C. Relief

$2,500 Added to Budget for Investigation of Aid System.

$3,347,819 Deficit Now Is Predicted

School, Welfare and Health Funds Also Are Increased.

By James D. Secrest.

School, health and welfare appropriations in the District supply bill were increased yesterday by the Senate sub-committee on the District as it began marking up the measure preparatory to reporting it to the Senate.

The sub-committee approved the broad unemployment relief inquiry suggested by Chairman Thomas (Democrat), Oklahoma, and increased the appropriation for the investigation from $5,000 to $7,500.

The relief appropriation was left at the $900,000 figure recommended by the Budget Bureau and voted by the House. If the inquiry discloses a need for additional funds, however, they will be included in the last general deficiency bill.

Senator Thomas said that appropriations generally were restored to Budget Bureau estimates.

Two Items Restored.

The Senate sub-committee eliminated several provisions inserted by the House sub-committee, including an authorization for the purchase of the Homeopathic Hospital and the transfer of jurisdiction over school playgrounds.

It restored the National Training School for Girls and the Children's Receiving Home, which the House and the House sub-committee had sought to close by withholding appropriations.

While the total of the bill will not be known until the Senate sub-committee acts on controversial highway fund items today, it appeared yesterday that the District deficit in the general revenue account will be substantially increased.

The House cut off $1,381,780 in Budget Bureau estimates over and above new items that were inserted. Even then it left a deficit of almost $2,000,000 to be raised by new taxes.

Deficit Estimated.

The Budget Bureau anticipated a deficit of $3,347,819 after changing the $765,000 street lighting cost to the highway fund.

Senator Thomas said the Senate sub-committee had returned this charge to the general revenue account, thus adding that much to the deficit.

The sub-committee inserted language suggested by Thomas defining the scope of the relief inquiry. The $7,500 cost will not be taken out of the $900,000 appropriation for relief, however, as formerly suggested.

"The scope of the investigation," according to the Senate provision, "shall cover the extent of unemployment in the District; the need for all types of relief; the extent to which existing agencies are meeting both the unemployment situation and the relief situation; the adequacy of individual grants; the characteristics of cases receiving assistance from public agencies; the administrative organization, policies, and procedures, including the ade-

Japan Abandons Salmon Research On Alaskan Coast

Tokyo, March 1 (AP).—The ministry of agriculture and forestry announced today Japan was abandoning its plan to send "research ships" to Alaska to study salmon migration.

An expedition has been examining salmon movements on a three-year basis, the first ships going to Bristol Bay in 1936. The announcement said friction was aroused in the United States when the ships returned to Alaskan waters in 1937.

Pacific Coast Senators have bitterly complained against the presence of Japanese fishing boats in Alaskan waters and have importuned the State Department to take action. Ruination of the Northwest salmon industry was threatened, they declared.

Death Deprives D'Annunzio Of Bizarre End He Hoped For Mentor of Mussolini Is Found in Bedroom of His Villa.

By the United Press.

Gardone, Italy, March 1.—Gabriele D'Annunzio, Italy's eccentric soldier-poet, died tonight from a brain hemorrhage in his villa in the Alpine foothills where he had been awaiting death for 16 years and improvising bizarre ways of meeting it.

Death came so quickly at 8:05 p. m. for the 74-year-old Italian hero, who was one of the world's first Fascists, that his exotic plans to meet death were brushed aside. He died in his bedroom, clad in woolen pajamas, as he was about to dress for dinner.

Only a few feet away was his "room of the leper"—sometimes he referred to it as "the cell of pure dreams"—that he had prepared for the day of death.

A terrified housemaid, in the monastic garb that he made all his servants wear, found him breathing his last. He was just about to begin his day's work, for he always slept in the daytime and wrote at night.

Had D'Annunzio lived another 12 days he would have been 75.

Fey Rallies Old Heimwehr to Combat Nazis

Troops Disbanded in 1936 Urged to Fight for a Free Austria.

By the Associated Press.

Graz, Austria, March 1.—Maj. Emil Fey, former chief of the fascistic Heimwehr, today issued a call to all former Heimwehr members to join him in fighting "for thee administration and for Austria" and prevent the threatened Nazi government coup. The Heimwehr, once the private army of Prince Ernst Rudiger von Starhemberg was disbanded in 1936.

Fey said he told Chancellor Schuschnigg he could mobilize "about 80,000 men in 48 hours." He said the chancellor seemed pleased, but urged that the organization be made a political rather than a militant force.

Meanwhile, in the tense border city of Graz an estimated 20,000 Nazis paraded noisily by torchlight, singing the Horst Wessel and shouting "One people—one nation!" In welcome to Dr. Arthur von Seyss-Inquart, Hitler-approved minister of the interior, who arrived with orders from Schuschnigg to "pacify Styria" or resign from the cabinet.

Demonstrators waving Nazi swastika flags marched far into the night, defying orders from both the government and Seyss-Inquart to cease. The 6,000 government troops, who on Sunday checked a Nazi scheme to march on Vienna, offered no opposition and gendarmes remained in their barracks.

Many of the marchers wore Nazi storm-trooper uniforms.

New Kidnap Note Sends Father to Chalk 'El' Pillar

By the Associated Press.

New Rochelle, N. Y., March 1.—A second kidnap note, written on a cheap "dial" typewriter, such as is sold as a toy, was disclosed today as the parents of 12-year-old Peter Levine, missing since last Thursday, waited, frantic to contact the boy's abductors.

The note directed Peter's father, Murray Levine, New York lawyer, or an emissary to go to a Third avenue elevated track in New York City and mark a pillar at a designated spot with green chalk.

Presumably a member of the "snatch" gang or the kidnaper himself would be on the watch and would recognize the father or emissary, thus being assured that the pay-off negotiations could proceed.

Eden Is Groomed As Envoy to U. S.

London (Wednesday), March 2 (U.P.).—The Daily Sketch's political correspondent today said a move had been started to bring about the appointment of Capt Anthony Eden, who resigned ten days ago as foreign secretary, as British Ambassador to Washington.

The tabloid pointed out that Sir Ronald Lindsay, present Ambassador, had served eight years and that "the question of his successor is urgent."

New Dirigible Is Authorized In Committee

House Naval Unit Also Urges Experiments on 'Mystery Ships.'

By the Associated Press.

Legislation to authorize construction of a dirigible and experimentation with "mystery" warships won the approval of the House Naval Committee yesterday as part of the $1,171,000,000 naval expansion program.

Senator Pittman (Democrat), Nevada, suggested a $600,000,000 increase in the $1,000,000,000 naval building program, "in view of continued foreign preparations for war and the almost total absence of plans for peace."

Pittman, who as chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee frequently voices Administration opinions, did not offer specific proposals for spending the extra money. The Navy Department, he said, could work out details.

"Must Be Prepared."

"Our Government must be prepared to win," he declared, "if we are imposed upon by any government or group of governments."

Speaking slowly and thoughtfully, Pittman added:

"If we are prepared to win, in my opinion we will not be attacked. The only answer to a threat is to increase our naval program. It is the cheapest insurance, both in money and human life, that I know of.

"While we all hate war and fear to have our loved ones die, this is no time to indicate fear."

During a two-hour session described by Chairman Vinson (Democrat) Georgia, as "a love feast," the committee recommended a $30,000,000 experimental fund for the Navy which, members said, would permit development of so-called "mosquito fleets" and other types of naval vessels.

Inventor Contracts.

In addition to a $15,000,000 appropriation advocated by President Roosevelt for experimentation, the committee voted to authorize the Navy to negotiate contracts with inventors for a similar amount.

Of the direct appropriation, $5,000,000 was earmarked for the "mystery" ships and $3,000,000 for construction of a dirigible about the size of the decommissioned Los Angeles. The balance of $7,000,000

Byrd Assails Bill to Revise Government

Says Plan Surrenders Majority Control to President.

Court Enlargement Foes Included in Bloc Fighting Measure.

Sounding the keynote of Senate opposition to the Administration's Government reorganization bill, Senator Harry Flood Byrd (Democrat), Virginia, yesterday told the Senate Congress is surrendering in one measure majority control "over the policies and functions of Government."

It was the opening attack on the reorganization measure defended in the Senate Monday by Senator James F. Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina. Throughout the afternoon the Virginia hammered away at the measure he said would increase the cost of government by "many millions" and turn over to the President policy-making powers now held by Congress.

Byrd denied he is "endeavoring to obstruct a prompt reorganization of the Federal Government."

Conscious of Waste.

"No member of the Senate is more sincerely anxious for prompt reorganization of the Government in the interest of economy, simplicity and efficiency than myself," he said. "No member of the Senate is more conscious of the extravagance which exists in the bureaus and departments here in Washington, the overlapping activities, the duplicated efforts and the opportunity which now exists for great savings of public funds."

But Byrd said he favored accomplishing these objectives by conferring upon the President no greater power "than is necessary to accomplish the purpose of a businesslike and thorough reorganization."

He insisted the General Accounting office as a check on expenditures should be preserved, along with the independence of independent Government agencies with quasi-judicial functions.

And he urged that Congress "go clearly on record that economy is one of the main objectives of any reorganization of Government."

Opposition Bloc Strong.

Byrd was one of the first in the Senate to advocate reorganization of New Deal agencies and still heads a special Senate reorganization committee. But the work of that group was largely taken over by House and Senate committees named to handle the President's own reorganization recommendations.

Backed by a strong bloc of Senators prominently identified with the successful fight on the President's court plan, he and others have offered a series of amendments to require Congressional approval of reorganization orders, to maintain the office of Comptroller General intact, to prevent displacement of the Civil Service Commission by a single administrator and to ultimately attain a 10 per cent saving in Government spending.

Visions Increased Costs.

His attack on the Administration measure (now greatly modified by Senator Byrnes), will be followed up in the Senate today with another broadside by Senator Josiah W. Bailey (Democrat), of North Carolina. Other Democratic opposition speeches by Senators David I. Walsh, of Massachusetts; Burton K. Wheeler, of Montana; Bennett Champ Clark, of Missouri, and Edward R. Burke, of Nebraska, will follow.

"I make this confident prediction," Byrd told the Senate yesterday, "that if the bill now before us is passed in its present form, not only will not a single dollar be

Visit to Isle of Capri Reveals Garbo-Stokowski Idyl in Italy

By the United Press.

Naples, March 1.—Hollywood's leading legend, which linked the names of glamorous Greta Garbo, Swedish star, and Leopold Stokowski, white-haired conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, was partly confirmed tonight when it was disclosed the pair have been spending a vacation together at the village of Ravello, overlooking the Gulf of Salerno.

A telephone conversation from friends of the pair on the romantic Isle of Capri, where they spent the day after a motorboat trip from Sorrento, confirmed the identities of both.

The pair, who appeared mysteriously at the Villa Cimbrone near the village of Ravello during the last week of February, were registered as Stokowski and "Margaret Louisa Gustafson," which is the Swedish actress' real name.

Italian friends of the pair were convinced they had come to Ravello to get married. Stokowski refused to say whether he had already married the film star.

Today the pair visited the Isle of Capri, a few miles off the coast in the Mediterranean, and were guests of Dr. Axel Munthe, Swedish writer.

Dr. Munthe, who has known Miss Garbo for years, erased any doubt as to the identity of the "Donna Misteriosa" at the Villa Cimbrone.

"I know Miss Garbo very well," he said. "She was accompanied by President Rejects Plea of Leaders to Mark Time on Plan.

He Bases Hopes On Liberal Bloc

Bankhead and Rayburn Had Proposed Year's Study of Problem.

By Sidney Olson.

Copyright, 1938, by The Washington Post.

President Roosevelt has been urged by Speaker William B. Bankhead and House Majority Leader Sam Rayburn to abandon wage-hour legislation at this session and to accept instead a proposal for a year's study of the problem by a joint legislative committee which would report to the next Congress, it was learned last night.

The President refused, and insisted that some sort of wage-hour bill be passed at this session, it was disclosed, despite the statement of the House leaders that the only bill that the House could agree on was a joint resolution providing for a lengthy study of the problem.

Bases Optimism on Reports.

No amount of persuasion or cold fact about the lack of enthusiasm in the House could budge the President from his determination to persist in seeking this major social legislation, which the Senate passed last summer and the House killed at the special session after a bitter fight.

He based his optimism, it was indicated, on reports given him by the House liberal bloc, a group of about 30 of the younger members of the House, in a recent mass conference at the White House.

Neither Bankhead nor Rayburn would discuss their Monday conference with the President—a morning session held each week with leaders from both Houses—other than to state that the regular business of Congress was reviewed.

"Problem Too Complex."

Meanwhile, Representative Sam D. McReynolds (Democrat), of Tennessee, chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee and leader of the successful House opposition last session to the wage-hour bill, declared yesterday:

"Wage-hour legislation is dead for this session. The only bill that can possibly pass the House at this session that affects wages and hours would be a joint resolution setting up a House-Senate committee to study the whole question for about a year.

"The problem is too complex. I understand that in the House Labor

Pershing Rallies, Eats Solid Food; Doctors Hopeful

Tucson, Ariz., March 1 (U.P.).—Gen. John J. Pershing, fighting against a complication of heart and kidney ailments, had made enough progress tonight to be able to take solid food.

Physicians were inclined to bbe optimistic, citing the fact that Pershing had marched out of his periods of coma and was gaining strength by undisturbed sleep.

"The general has slept most of the morning, but remains fully conscious," Dr. Roland Davison said in a midday bulletin. "The kidney function in the last 24 hours has been sufficiently adequate to remove some of the poisonous substances which have accumulated in the blood . . . elimination of these substances depends on the ability of the heart to handle rather large amounts of fluid. While the heart still is very weak, up to the present time it is competent."

Berry's '$5,000,000 Marble' Is Worthless, Experts Decide

Senator's Claim Denied by Report on Norris Dam Survey.

By the Associated Press.

Knoxville, Tenn., March 1.—A three-member Federal commission reported tonight the marble properties of Senator George L. Berry and his associates in the TVA's Norris Dam area were "commercially worthless" and had no value.

The celebrated case came to an undramatic close when the commissioners signed the report in the case that had its reverberations on the floors of the United States Senate.

In 18 words, the commission appointed by Federal Judge George Taylor dashed the hopes of the Berry interests, who had claimed a value of "more than $5,000,000." Those words were:

Baruch's Views Lend Strength To Revisionists

Senate Leaders Admit He Helps Those Who Seek Changes.

Conclusion yesterday of two days of mildly-worded but effective criticism of major Administration policies by Bernard M. Baruch, Wall Street financier, brought admissions last night from Senate and Administration leaders that his testimony unquestionably had created a strong sentiment for revision of those policies.

Speaking unofficially, a source close to the White House and several Senators asserted the closely-followed testimony of Baruch yesterday and Monday before the Senate Unemployment Committee constituted a definite blow to the New Deal by a man who was one of the largest contributors to the Democratic Party and who is a close friend of the President.

Baruch stated on several occasions that he made his criticisms with regret, and the quiet sincerity of his manner repeatedly evidenced his earnestness in seeking to change the course of administration policies, and their modification, rather than their utter condemnation.

Senator James F. Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina, chairman of the committee, and Senator Carl Hatch (Democrat), of New Mexico, vainly strove at yesterday's session to "correct the impression" that Baruch had criticized Administration policies. Hatch charged the press had unfairly pictured the financier's testimony, and Byrnes asked Baruch directly:

"Do you now favor repeal of any Administration measures constituting the New Deal?"

Baruch said "No," but added he did favor substantial modification of some. He adhered closely to his written statement, which on the day before stated:

"All this depends on national policy. If it remains what recently

Breathing Spell From New Deal Is Anticipated

President Vague on When Monopoly Message Will Go to Congress.

Further evidence that President Roosevelt had decided to give the country a breathing spell from more New Deal reforms and undertakings was contributed yesterday at the semiweekly White House press conference. For the most part the results of the conference were negative.

The President indicated he still proposed to send a message to Congress on the subject of monopoly, but was vague as to when the document might go foath. He said it probably would not be next week or the week after. Previous reports have been to the effect that the message will not go beyond proposing a study of the problem.

Shortly before the press conference the President conferred with Attorney General Homer S. Cummings, Assistant Attorney General Robert H. Jackson and William O. Douglas, chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission. This trio would not discuss their visit. Mr. Roosevelt said it dealt with the monopoly problem but declined to go into details.

To Discuss Phosphates.

The President revealed he also was working on another message to Congress, which may go to Capitol Hill in a few days. He said it would concern the problem of phosphates throughout the world but that he would not make any specific proposals. He said he would discuss phosphates in relation to civilization and human food supplies—a subject of tremendous importance, he added, to which no one has ever given any serious consideration. He declined further details, explaining he did not wish to anticipate his message.

The President also asserted he had no immediate plans for changing the National labor relations act, al-

Wife-Beater Taken to Hospital, Back Crisscrossed by Flogging

(Pictures, Pages 6 and 10.)

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, March 1.—Clyde Miller, lashed 20 times as a punishment for wife-beating, was taken to the City Jail Hospital tonight, although Warden Harry Price said he had suffered no apparent ill effects from his ordeal at the whipping post.

Price said "he's resting all right now," but that he would remain in the hospital for an indefinite time.

The 37-year-old printer lay face down on a hospital cot. He also must serve six months in jail as added punishment for beating his wife. His back was criss-crossed with welts raised by the blows of a cat-o'-nine tails.

Shortly before noon, Miller was led from his cell to the jail lobby, where the black whipping post and cat-o'-nine tails waited. Sheriff Joseph C. Deegan, calm and dignified, laid on the lash in even measured strokes, using little of his 220-pound weight behind them.

Miller, eyes downcast as he was strapped to the post, cringed under the first two blows, whimpered at the third and then groaned in pain at each succeeding blow.

There were no women among the 50 witnesses. Mrs. Elizabeth Miller, 33, who said she wanted to see her husband flogged, was not admitted.

She waited in a car at the jail entrance, eager for a description of the lashing, and commented:

"I'd like to give him a couple more."

Republicans in Minority File Attack Against Revenue Measure.

(Partial Report on Page 14.)

By Robert C. Albright.

Copyright, 1938, by The Washington Post.

A poll of the Senate Finance Committee yesterday revealed 13 of the 21 members for completely repealing the undivided profits tax and for broad Senate modification in other features of the House tax bill.

Views of the Senate tax group were canvassed as the House Ways and Means Committee voted 17 to 7 to report the new tax measure, and committee Republicans filed a fiery minority report condemning undivided profits tax, capital gains and penalty tax provisions of the bill.

The Senate Finance Committee poll provided the first clear indication that the undivided profits tax will be entirely repealed or drastically altered when it reaches the Senate group. It left little doubt the proposed penalty tax on "closely held" or family corporations will be eliminated by the Senate committee.

Filed by Doughton.

The tax bill was filed in the House by Chairman Robert L. Doughton of the Ways and Means Committee before the House committee met in executive session to report it. It will be called up in the House tomorrow. The majority report was ordered filed along with the independent Democratic views of Representatives John W. McCormack, of Massachusetts, and Arthur P. Lamneck, of Ohio, who opposed penalty tax features. Seven Republican members voted in a block against the bill and 17 Democrats voted for it.

Later the seven Republicans made public a minority report assailing the undivided profits tax principle as "vicious and indefensible," and criticizing the penalty levy as "unwarranted and discriminatory." They said the capital gains tax should be limited to "increase the revenue from this source by encouraging, rather than preventing, capital gains transactions and the investment of new funds in productive enterprises."

Chairman Pat Harrison, of the Senate Finance Committee, said he will call an executive meeting of the Senate group as soon as tax experts can be released by the Ways and Means Committee.

Yesterday's poll of the Finance Committee showed the following 13

$250,000,000 Grant For Emergency Aid Ready to Be Signed

By the Associated Press.

A $250,000,000 emergency relief appropriation, overwhelmingly approved by Congress, went to the White House yesterday for signature by President Roosevelt.

Congressional action was completed when the House accepted, on a 336-to-9 vote, a joint Senate-House committee's compromise between bills the two chambers passed originally.

Aubrey Williams, acting WPA administrator, stepped up the March relief program yesterday. He authorized the addition of 500,000 persons to the work relief rolls, bringing the total job quota to 2,500,000.

The conference report on the relief bill eliminated from the original measure a House amendment denying relief funds to aliens who had not filed citizenship papers.

Roosevelt's Pen Will Profit Him 'Not One Penny'

Early Says Proceeds of Writings Will Be Given to 'Public Purpose.'

By Franklyn Waltman.

President Roosevelt will not receive "a penny of the net proceeds from the newspaper syndication and magazine publication" of his commentaries on his messages, papers and policies, soon to be published in book form, Stephen T. Early, secretary to the President, declared yesterday.

Instead of the President or Judge Samuel I. Roseman, compiler of the forthcoming volumes, profiting, Early asserted, whatever sum remains after payment of expenses and taxes will go to an unidentified "useful public purpose under Government direction." He indicated Congressional authorization would be sought for the plan the President had in mind.

Moreover, said Early, Mr. Roosevelt has "not sold" in any form the transcripts of his press conferences. Under an arrangement whereby a national weekly bought two articles based on the President's commentaries, it received permission to publish a third dealing with the press conferences. But the data on which this article will be based will be supplied generally to the press in advance of the magazine publication, the White House secretary explained.

Is First Explanation.

Early made these statements as part of the first White House explanation of the reasons for the publication at this time of the President's papers and messages and the reasons for the sale of syndication and magazine rights. The explanation came three weeks to a day after the President first confirmed the sale of the syndication rights of his commentaries on these papers.

Immediately after Mr. Roosevelt's confirmation of newspaper syndication and throughout the intervening three weeks he has been subjected to severe criticism on the ground of commercializing his White House position. Neither the President nor Early throughout that period offered any explanation in response to that criticism until yesterday.

Nor did Early, in charge of press relations at the White House, deny the statement, sent out by the North American Newspaper Alliance, a syndicate, to its members and published by them, that the Roosevelt commentaries had been offered to it for $100,000, but that the offer had been rejected. Nor was there any denial, direct or implied, until yesterday, of this further statement contained in the North American Newspaper Alliance story:

"To an inquiry as to whether the net revenue from the sale of the books and the magazine and newspaper rights would go to charity, the answer from the White House secretariat was that it would not, and that the President's statement at his press conference today covered the whole subject. The assumption is that the proceeds would go to the President."

No mention was made of monetary considerations or their distribution at the press conference referred to by the North American Newspaper Alliance story.

Early, however, yesterday broke the White House silence regarding this subject, prefacing his remarks with the statement that there had been "misrepresentation and false charges" by editorial writers, news commentators and others regarding the publication of articles dealing with the forthcoming volumes containing the President's papers. He said none of the critics had made any inquiry to ascertain the facts before writing and speaking. Early indicated he felt deeply about the whole matter.

He likewise asserted that reports of the sum to be received from the newspaper syndication and magazine articles had been "grossly exaggerated." He indicated it was not near the $100,000 figure frequently mentioned on the basis of the offering price claimed by the North American Newspaper Alliance. But he declined to state the exact terms of the contracts or the figures involved, as he also declined to give any details regarding the "useful public purpose" to which he said the funds would be contributed after payment of expenses, such as promotion and advertising, and taxes.

To Give Only Net Proceeds.

Incidentally, Early said only the net proceeds of the newspaper syndication and magazine publication would be contributed to this purpose. Asked why the proceeds from publication of the forthcoming five volumes would not be included, he said there was no assurance there would be any profits in so expensive an undertaking.

He further explained that had the President not wished to give the press a right to the use of the press conference transcripts, the net proceeds involved probably would run well over $100,000. He said that a magazine—not the one to which two articles finally were sold and one given—had offered $90,000 for the exclusive rights of all three articles, including that dealing with the press conferences.

He said this offer was rejected because the President many months ago had promised that when the press conference transcripts were released the press would get them first.

Early said the reason for the publication of the five volumes of the President's papers at this time resulted from the heavy demands made on the White House by public libraries, schools, colleges research and public information agencies for authentic material and information regarding the President's utterances and writings. He said these requests also called for explanation and statements relating to the speeches, papers and policies of the President and that it was felt these could be compiled more accurately and readily while the Administration remained in office.

So much for the reasons impelling publication in book form of the President's papers, with commentaries bearing on them. The reason for newspaper syndication and magazine articles was not a desire for personal profit but in order to get the President's views before the largest possible number of persons. He said that obviously many people interested in the President's views could not or would not purchase five thick volumes. For a time he said consideration was given to disseminating this information by radio but that idea was abandoned because the radio "leaves no record."

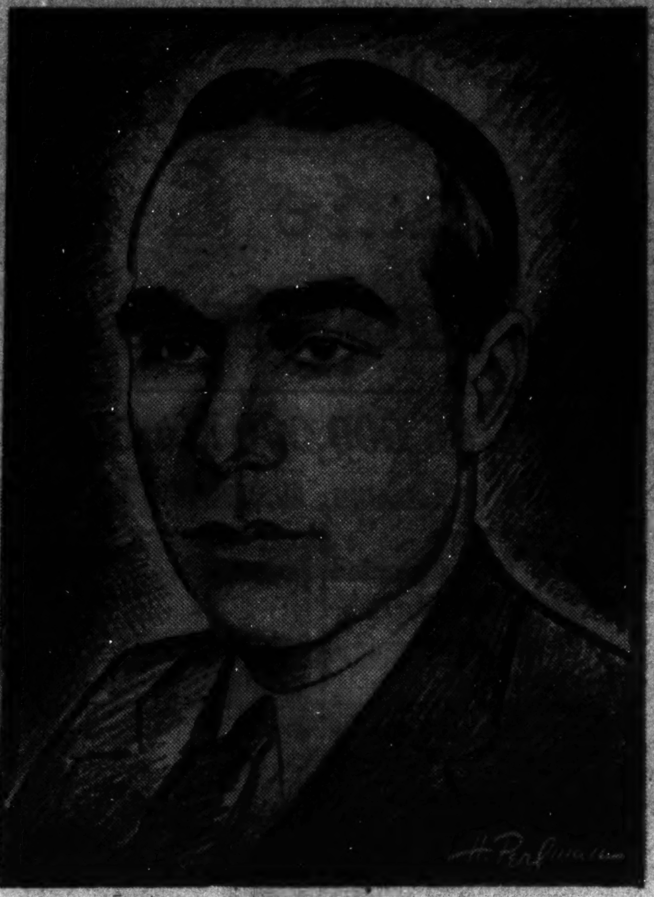
Norelli Leading Figure in War To Protect Health of District



VINCENT B. NORELLI.

Charter Member of Pharmacists' Society Favors Law Curbing Drug Abuses and Adequate Testing of Products' Therapeutic Value.

By Christine Sadler

That the "little man" pharmacist might have his inning and add his voice in behalf of health practices he considered worthy, the Pharmacists Society of the District of Columbia was organized in 1932. Before that date only pharmacist employers had a professional organization in Washington.

"We have both employes and employers and are open to all professional pharmacists," Vincent B. Norelli, charter member, former president and delegated to the Federation of Citizens Associations, said yesterday.

Approximately 175 pharmacists are members of the society. Some of them, including Norelli, also belong to the Pharmaceutical Association, which is made up of retail druggists.

The society is interested in civic affairs of the District, and works in co-operation with the Board of Pharmacy and the Public Health Department. It is on record in favor of compulsory vaccination for school children, thinks a uniform narcotic law for all States should be passed by this Congress, and is in favor of a law which would protect the District against abuses from sales of habit-forming drugs.

"Both Maryland and Virginia have laws which restrict the sales, but we have none here," Norelli said.

The society also believes there should be a law which would require adequate testing of products as to their therapeutic value before they are placed on the market.

"Our objective is to do all we can to protect the health of the District and to co-operate with physicians in any way possible," Norelli said.

"We are also interested in all civic problems, and think we should be permitted to vote."

He is a member of the national representation and public health committees of the citizens federation and believes that "Congress should pay its full share toward expenses of the District, and that share has been set by law at 40 per cent."

"We think that if Congress did that there would be enough money to cover many needs of the city, and we certainly believe there should always be enough funds to cover needs of the Public Health Department," he declared.

Norelli has been a member of the society since its inception, and was its first secretary. He then served two terms as president. At present, the organization is without a chief executive. C. R. Williams, who was elected to succeed Norelli, has moved from the city and a new head must be selected.

Born in Connecticut, Norelli came to Washington 15 years ago. He attended Georgetown University and was graduated from the George Washington School of Pharmacy. He is in business for himself at 1746 K street northwest, plays golf, rides horseback and likes sports of all kinds. He is married and the father of a 4-month-old son.

'High-Pressure' Sales of Autos Will Be Curbed

By the Associated Press.

Senator Brown (Democrat), Michigan, yesterday said four of the country's largest automobile finance companies had agreed to accept the major points of President Roosevelt's suggestions toward elimination of "high-pressure salesmanship" of automobiles.

In a letter delivered to the President by the Michigan Senator, the large finance firms said they would not object to a limitation of 18 months on installment payments for cars, Brown said.

They also gave approval, Brown asserted, to the President's suggestion that deficiency judgments be abandoned, where possible.

Fleet to Begin War Games in Pacific Mar. 14

58,600 Officers and Men to Take Part in Giant Sea Maneuvers.

By the Associated Press.

San Pedro, Calif., March 1.—A vivid six-week drama of war in the Pacific starts March 14.

It is the annual maneuvers of the United States Fleet. "Fleet Problem 19" is the title. The players are 3,600 officers and 55,000 men aboard 150 surface ships and 500 fighting airplanes.

The theater extends from the Aleutian Islands and Alaska, down to Hawaii and across to the West Coast of the United States. Three problems of naval warfare are involved.

Lifts Secrecy Veil.

Admiral C. C. Bloch, commander in chief of the fleet, lifted the veil of secrecy enough to outline 12 parts of the drama today:

Departure of the two fleets from San Diego and San Pedro.

The White Fleet, with heavy cruisers and giant sky bombing patrols, commanded by Vice Admiral W. T. Tarrant, defends a coast line with orders to defeat the Black Fleet—battleships, aircraft carriers, destroyers—commanded by Admiral E. C. Kalbfus. There will be surprise encounters, day and night, including use of submarines and all types of naval aircraft.

Admiral Bloch resumes command of the whole fleet for tactics.

Division of forces for second big war problem.

Blue Fleet, commanded by Admiral Bloch, attacks Hawaiian area. Red Fleet, of submarines, sky patrols and fast craft, defends Hawaii, under command of Rear Admiral O. G. Murfin, commandant there. The fleet marine force, commanded by Maj. Gen. L. M. Little, will land.

Island Operations.

Parts 6, 7, 8 and 9 will be operations in the Hawaiian area, fleet tactics under direction of Admiral Bloch, and periods at anchor for provisioning, fueling, recreation and upkeep.

Division of forces for the third big war problem.

The Purple Fleet, commanded by Admiral Kalbfus, attacks west coast of the United States, threatening the region from the Aleutians to San Diego. The Green Fleet, commanded by Vice Admiral Tarrant and composed of heavy cruisers, sky patrols and submarines, and regular coast defense forces, defends. Operations will be against West Coast seaports and supply bases.

Units reorganize into normal forces and cruise back to San Diego and San Pedro bases.

Expert Explains Way for Testing Real Emeralds

If you receive an emerald ring as a St. Patrick's Day gift, you can be pretty sure that the stone is genuine. According to the Smithsonian Institution, it costs more to manufacture fake emeralds than to dig real ones out of the ground.

But for the benefit of the skeptical, the Smithsonian provides instructions for a simple test. All that is needed is some clove oil, some cinnamon oil and a magnifying glass to prove the gem is genuine.

Mix the two oils in equal quantities and place the emerald in a small glass cup of the liquid, advises Dr. William F. Foshag, of the National Museum staff. Then look at the gem with a magnifying glass. If its color is grass or emerald green and varies little when looked at from different sides, the chances are the stone is real.

Synthetic emeralds, Dr. Foshag says, show up blue-green or gray-green in the solution. They also are apt to reveal a "veinlike network of minute cavities" or "elongated cavities aligned in rows."

Generals at N.Y. And Manila to Exchange Posts

Grant to Leave Brooklyn, Humphrey Will Quit Stotsenburg.

Two Army generals were ordered yesterday to exchange posts.

Brig. Gen. Walter S. Grant, now in command of the New York Port of Embarkation, Brooklyn, N. Y., was ordered to the Philippines to take charge of Fort Stotsenburg and Brig. Gen. Evan H. Humphrey, now commanding Fort Stotsenburg, has been ordered to command the New York Port of Embarkation.

Officials here denied there was any significance to the shift which, they said, had been contemplated for some time.

Brig. Gen. Gerald C. Brant meanwhile, bade farewell to officers and enlisted personnel at Langley Field, Va., where he has been in command of the second wing of the GHQ Air Force. He has been ordered to Chanute Field, Rantoul, Ill., where he will be in charge of the Air Corps Technical School as well as Lowry Field, Denver, Colo., where a branch of the school recently was inaugurated.

Fuqua Coming Here.

The War Department also announced yesterday that Lieut. Col. Henry B. Sheadley has been assigned as military attache at the American Embassy in Spain. He will succeed Col. Stephen O. Fuqua, former Chief of Artillery, who has been ordered home preparatory to his retirement at the end of the year.

Gen. Grant is well-known in in Washington. He attended the Army War College in 1924 and upon graduation become director of its command course. Later he served as director of the war plans division of the War College in 1926 and 1927.

After service at various posts on the Eastern seaboard, Gen. Grant returned to the War College in March, 1935, as assistant commandant, and the following October he was made acting commandant. In June, 1936, he became commandant of the War College and he was ordered to command of the New York Port of Embarkation in July of the following year.

Gen. Humphrey also has served as a student and as a member of the faculty of the Army War College. He studied there from August, 1924, until September, 1925, and then served as a member of the faculty for nearly four years. He returned to Washington as assistant commandant of the War College in 1933 for a two-year tour of duty.

Krogstad to Langley.

In the World War Gen. Humphrey was on duty with the 46th U. S. Infantry and later served on the staff of the Tenth Division. In February, 1919, he became chief of staff of the Central Department. In August of the following year he was ordered to Fort Leavenworth, Kans., as a student in the School of the Line, from which he was graduated in June, 1921.

The War Department also announced promotion of 23 other officers.

The following majors have been promoted to the rank of lieutenant colonel: Robert S. Barr, Marvin C. Heyser, Sidney G. Brady, George A. Pollin, Charles J. Herzer, Marvin R. Baer, Harold P. Kayser, Basil D. Spalding, George L. Febiger, Claud E. Stadtman, Luther R. Moore and Frank P. MacKenzie.

Captains promoted to major were Lewis M. Van Gieson, William W. Wise, Arthur E. King, Frederick H. Gaston, Aubrey J. Bassett, Frank A. Derouin, Gottfried W. Spoerry, Harry D. Ayres, Edwin U. O. Waters, John J. Gorman and Rodney C. Jones.

Louisiana Creole gumbo that spoiled forever all imitation gumboes for the palates of 100 newspapermen and women was served the Capitol Hill correspondents yesterday through the courtesy of Senator and Mrs. Allen Ellender, of Louisiana.

Forced to miss their own Mardi Gras celebrations, the Senator and his wife gave their party at luncheon hour, with Mrs. Ellender and the office force supervising the cooking and serving of the gumbo (made of Louisiana oysters, crab meat, shrimp, okra, rice and spices) apple pie with brandy or hard sauce and Louisiana drip coffee.

Each guest was presented with a boutonniere in the Mardi Gras colors—yellow, purple and green.

Action on the nomination of Assistant Attorney General Robert H. Jackson as Solicitor General was delayed yesterday by the Senate. Majority Leader Alben W. Barkley (Democrat), of Kentucky, said Senator Warren R. Austin (Republican), of Vermont, who opposed the nomination in committee wanted to speak for an hour on Jackson's views as expressed in the official's anti-monopoly speeches.

The Senate is expected to confirm today the reappointment of I. W. Truxton, of Norfolk, Va., as customs collector for the Fourteenth Customs District with headquarters in that city. The Senate Finance Committee yesterday reported favorably on the reappointment.

* * * *

One matter which may be settled by the pending Administration's reorganization bill is whether the United States has a comptroller or a controller. Senator Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina, wants the office abolished while Senator Byrd, also a Democrat from Virginia, wants it retained. It is reported, however, they agree the spelling should be "controller."

T. Coleman Andrews, of Richmond, Va., former State auditor of public accounts, has pleaded in a letter to Senator Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, that the spelling be made "controller." "Why use a foreign word when there is a perfectly good English one that means the same thing?" argued Andrews.

* * * *

Speaking of foreign persons instead of words, Senator Andrews (Democrat), Florida, suggested yesterday the Government pursue a stricter policy toward undesirable aliens. Andrew said at a meeting of the Immigration Committee, of which he is a member that he was "tired of this country being made a refuge for the undesirables of other nations." He told the committee considering the Dies alien bill, which designates a new list of offenses for which aliens may be deported, that there should be more deportations.

The nomination of Elwood Hamilton, of Kentucky, as judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit comprising Ohio, Michigan, Kentucky and Tennessee was confirmed yesterday by the Senate.

The brightness of the light has but matched the brilliance of his performance."

Architects Claim D. C. Men 'Poach' On Md. Business

The county commissioners of both Prince Georges and Montgomery counties were informed yesterday that "a number of Washington architects were practicing in nearby Maryland without first complying with the State registration law."

Paul H. Kea, of Hyattsville, Md., a representative of the Maryland Society of Registered Architects, Washington metropolitan section, visited the Montgomery board at Rockville and the Prince Georges board at Upper Marlboro, asking their assistance in enforcement of the State law requiring architects to pass an examination and pay a license fee to the Maryland registration board in Baltimore. The fee is $20 for the first year and $10 a year thereafter.

Kea said he estimated that 90 per cent of the architectural work in the metropolitan areas of the two counties was being done by Washington architects who were not registered in Maryland.

The act which provided for registration of architects in Maryland was passed by the Legislature in 1935. It includes a maximum penalty of $1,000 fine and a year in House of Correction, or both, for violations.

Hildebrandt to Seek S. Dakota Senate Seat

By the Associated Press.

"I have withdrawn as a candidate for the House of Representatives and will make a clean constructive campaign for the nomination to the Senate," he said.

Frank's Group Moves to Seek Democratic Aid

G. O. P. Policy Committee Hopes to Enlist Disaffected Foes.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, March 1.—The Republican program committee today moved to obtain the support of dissatisfied Democrats.

Members of the group assigned to the task of shaping a statement of policy on current affairs adopted a resolution instructing the committee to "keep in mind the desirability of a field of common thought on which all elements in agreement with the political and economic principles that we consider vital to the defense and development of America's free institutions may unite."

Coalition Discussed.

Chairman Glenn Frank said the new move stemmed from discussion of the feasibility of an attempt to form a coalition with dissatisfied or disaffected Democrats.

"It is probably inevitable," he elaborated, "that sooner or later those who think alike about a political and economic basis upon which to proceed will have to act alike as well as think alike."

The national program committee established nine regional sub-committees to obtain a cross-section of opinion from the rank and file of the party. The regional chairman will report to a central agency with headquarters here.

The two-day meeting ended with the program drafters directed to devote their efforts to a three-fold duty. They were asked by Dr. Frank to (1) "make an honest and objective audit of the New Deal," (2) restate the "economic and political philosophy with which the Republican Party faces the new circumstances of the new era," (3) shape a "comprehensive report of policy" on such moot problems as labor, agriculture, business, taxation, social security, political and foreign affairs and unemployment.

Nine Divisions Created.

No time limit was fixed. As the first step toward obtaining the viewpoints of the citizens, the nine regional groups were created. The divisions and their chairmen are:

1. New England; John H. Trumbull, of Connecticut.
2. New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia; H. Alexander Smith, Princeton, N. J.
3. Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, West Virginia, Kentucky; Chairman to be named later.
4. Virginia, North and South Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi; J. Sam White, of North Carolina.
5. Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, North and South Dakota; W. J. Goodwin, Des Moines, Iowa.
6. Arkansas, Louisiana, Texas, Oklahoma, New Mexico; chairman to be named later.
7. Montana, Idaho, Washington, Oregon; David Eccles 3d, Portland, Oreg.
8. Wyoming, Nevada, Utah, Colorado; Philo Farnsworth, Salt Lake City.
9. Arizona, California, Hawaiian Islands, Chester Rowell, San Francisco.

Tennessee Race Is Narrowed as Chandler Quits

By the Associated Press.

Representative Walter Chandler, of Tennessee, announced yesterday his withdrawal from the Tennessee gubernatorial campaign.

"State Senator Prentice Cooper, of Bedford County, also has announced for Governor," Chandler said.

"He has the reputation of a man of character, ability and integrity. . . . "As there should be a united front against the enemy, my best efforts are tendered to Senator Cooper."

Chaucer's Hatte . . .

ALTHOUGH the secret of felting was known by the ancients, the art was lost during the Dark Ages and not recovered again until shortly before the Crusades. And so it is a far cry from Chaucer's description of a "merchaunt" wearing upon his "heed a Floundrysshe bever hatte . . . made of a certaine kinde of fine hair, fetched from beyond the seas, called beaver . . ." to the modern John Cavanagh felt hat, yet the process of manufacture is intrinsically the same, with this exception: Cavanagh hatters of today have a tradition to uphold—a tradition born of generations of hatting to quality-conscious men. This is why three, four, and even five years is not an unusual life span for a Cavanagh hat.

Mystery Fires Sweep Beach, Raze 5 Homes

Summer Cottages of Washingtonians Burned; Loss $25,000.

Gale-fanned blazes which already have destroyed five summer cottages owned by Washingtonians still burned at Kenwood Beach, Md., last night, endangering thousands of dollars worth of property.

The first fire started at the beach resort, 50 miles from Washington, early Monday. The cottages burned were those of John W. Portch, 3017 Central avenue northeast, and Joseph J. Lorditch, 1227 Irving street northeast.

The second fire yesterday leveled the summer homes of Arsenio Ralon, 3723 Kansas avenue northwest; Alexander Ridell, 611 F street northeast, and Charles N. Coseboom, Devonshire Courts North.

The houses were valued at about $5,000 each.

Incendiarism Rumored.

The occurrence of two firse in the same number of days gave rise to rumors of incendiarism among the villagers.

Officially, Chief B. G. Loveless, of the North Beach (Md.) Fire Department, listed the first fire as resulting from embers in the fireplace of the Portch home and the second blaze as "cause unknown."

Members of the Portch family had spent Sunday in the cottage and built an open fire, Loveless said. Although they extinguished the fire before they left, he believes timber in the structure of the fireplace itself had become ignited and caused the destruction of that building and the smaller Lorditch cottage.

Witnesses at yesterday's fire advanced the theory that electric light wires blown by a heavy wind against the roof of the Coseboom cottage might have short circuited. The fact the two groups of cottages are some distance apart lessens the likelihood yesterday's fire was a recurrence of Monday's, Loveless said.

Firemen Too Late.

Ralon and E. S. McChesney, owner of a fourth cottage which adjoins the Coseboom's, were notified by Kenwood Beach residents yesterday and hurried to the scene. They found the buildings burned to the ground, though the fire had started only three hours before. They could salvage no furniture or other equipment from the ruins.

North Beach firemen arrived at Kenwood Beach, 23 miles away, too late to save the burning cottages.

Pumping water from a nearby creek, they managed to check the flames, which were spreading across the dry grass toward the McChesney home.

About 45 other cottages were in danger of destruction before the corps of firemen and volunteers got the smoldering brush under control.

Coseboom, an architectural engineer with the Treasury Department, is out of town and has not yet learned of his loss. Ridell, who rooms in Washington, but maintained a permanent home at Kenwood Beach, also had not been notified last night.

Monday's fire was fought by a bucket brigade, which relayed water from Chesapeake Bay. The pumping apparatus was too heavy to cross the small wooden bridge which spans a creek near the Portch and Lorditch cottages. Yesterday's blaze started on the other side of the creek and thus could be fought with pumped water. More than 900 feet of hose was necessary to carry the water from the creek.

Both alarms were given by the only family of winter residents at Kenwood Beach. They telephoned to North Beach from Port Republic, the nearest town in which there is a telephone, a drive of about 4 miles.

Hosiery Workers Vote To End Protest Strike

Philadelphia, March 1 (AP).—American Federation of Hosiery Workers in Philadelphia voted today to end Friday a work stoppage which halted operation of all but six of the city's 65 mills and kept workers in parts of three States idle.

May Proposes A 'West Point' For U.S. Doctors

School Here Would Train Men for Army, Navy, Health Service.

A United States medical and surgical college that would correspond in the field of medicine to West Point and Annapolis in the military and naval fields was proposed yesterday in a bill introduced by Representative May (Democrat), Kentucky.

May's bill authorizes an appropriation of $10,000,000 for construction of the college, and specifies that it must be built in Washington.

The author explained that its purpose was to assure the training of medical and surgical officers for the Army, Navy and Public Health Service.

Students would be admitted only upon completion of a standard college course and appointment by a Senator or Representative. They would be paid $1,200 a year for a three-year term.

Upon graduation they would be given preferred status in the Army, Navy or Public Health Service.

The college would be directed by a board of regents composed of the surgeon-generals of the Army, Navy and Public Health Service, and four Presidential appointees recommended by the following: the American Medical Association, the American College of Surgeons, the American Dental Association and the American College of Physicians.

The chairman would be paid $12,000 a year and members $100 a day when sitting as board members.

A clinic for the benefit of persons earning less than $1,000 a year would be operated at the college under provisions of the bill.

Another provision would consolidate all Government hospitals, sanitariums and medical, surgical and health research centers here, with the exception of Howard University and Walter Reed Hospital.

Philbin, Broker, Pleads Guilty to Fraud Indictment

New York, March 1 (AP).—Philip H. Philbin, jr., stock market operator and big game hunter, pleaded guilty before Federal Judge John C. Knox to day to the 14-count indicement charging him and others with using the mails to defraud, conspiracy and violating the national securities act.

Before Philbin pleaded, William L. Jarvis, of Boston, and Samuel L. Gaines, of New York, indicted with him, withdrew earlier pleas and pleaded guilty. After the Philbin plea had been entered, McNeel's Financial Service, Inc., of Boston; William J. Kennedy, Edward F. Barry and Henry Barry, who are connected with that corporation; Harold B. Hale and Philip H. Philbin, Jr., Inc., entered guilty pleas.

The maximum penalties which might be imposed total 67 years imprisonment and $27,000 fine for each individual defendant, with fines only for the corporate defendants.

Sentencing was deferred until tomorrow.

Garbo

a gentleman named Stokowski, whom I do not know, but he looked like a Pole."

Telephone lines to the Villa Cimbrene have been disconnected and the mysterious pair would see no one, but from the people at Ravello and Amalfi, a large town on the coast below Naples, it was learned they are vacationing "for about a month."

Hasty Farewell Recalled.

Stokowski, world-famous orchestra leader, left the United States a few weeks ago, after his second wife, the former Evangeline Brewster Johnson, of the New Brunswick, N. J., medical supplies manufacturers, obtained a divorce in Las Vegas, Nev.

The last heard of Miss Garbo was in December, when Stokowski rushed to the pier in New York just before the vessel departed to drink a farewell glass of champagne with the actress.

The villa where Stokowski and "Miss Gustafson" are staying is on one of the most strikingly beautiful coastlines of southern Italy, nestled in craggy cliffs a few miles from Amalfi.

The pair has been seen frequently in the evening, walking slowly along the footpaths.

Miss Garbo's name has been linked with practically every eligible male in Hollywood, but the most persistent reports involved three men—John Gilbert, the last of the "great lovers" of the silent films, who married four women; Maurice Stiller, who brought her to the United States and lifted her to stardom, and Stokowski.

Young Pendergast Named in Missouri Vote Fraud Trials

Kansas City, March 1 (AP).—James Pendergast, who directed the T. J. Pendergast Democratic organization at the 1936 general election, was drawn into Government testimony today at the twelfth of a series of vote fraud trials.

Mrs. Elva O'Byrne, a Republican committeewoman who pleaded guilty, said she was paid $100 in an "agreement" prior to the election by Mrs. Frances Ryan, only woman ward leader in the Pendergast organization.

The witness quoted Mrs. Ryan as saying:

"I've had a time getting this money; I had to make two trips to see Jimmy Pendergast."

In the previous ten trials, 50 persons have been convicted of conspiracy to commit vote frauds by not counting votes and changing ballots from Republican to Democratic.

Dime Novel Crime Fails When Thief Can't Injure Self

Dime novel mystery thrillers caused the downfall yesterday of a colored messenger employed by a druggist in the 3400 block of Fourteenth street northwest.

The messenger told police he had read of so many "perfect" crimes that he decided to try his luck. He arranged for an unidentified accomplice to rob him of $30 of his employers' money, then to report the robbery and say that the messenger had been injured. The slip was that the accomplice reported the crime before the messenger had time to inflict sufficient self injury with an iron pipe to make the job appear real.

Police arrested the messenger and were attempting to locate his partner in crime last night.

Martha Raye Too Ill Of Influenza to Testify

Los Angeles, March 1 (AP).—Martha Ray, who usually can out-shout the rest of the cast, could speak only in a whisper today. The film singer is in a hospital with influenza, a physician's affidavit said, and unable to testify in a deposition hearing concerning her earnings.

The hearing, scheduled for today, concerns the suit of her father, Peter F. Reed, who asks an accounting of her earnings prior to her twenty-first birthday.

High Bail Fixed For 4 Seized in Bogus Bill Case

3 Caught After Chase Admit Passing Counterfeit Tens.

Four Baltimore men yesterday were held to the grand jury on bonds totaling $14,000 in connection with the passing of several counterfeit $10 bills Monday night.

Arrested by Secret Service agents and local police, the men gave their names as Anthony Vacca, 24; Frank Palmisano, 21; Anthony Marino, 29, and Anthony Picirilli, 20, all of Baltimore.

All pleaded guilty except Palmisano, who waived preliminary hearing.

Maurice Allen, chief of local Secret Service bureau, said he believed the men bought the bogus notes in Baltimore for $2 each. He said they might have passed 40 notes before they were apprehended.

The men were seized on information given police by Nathan Chathin, 500 Eighth street southeast, who detected one of the bad bills.

Planes Ready, Goering Warns Prague, Vienna

Neighbors Told Germans Within Their Borders Will Be Protected.

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, March 1.—Germany's only active field marshal, Hermann Wilhelm Goering, today warned that the Reich's air force was ready to protect the "ten millions of Germans on our borders."

His defiant radio address commemorating the third anniversary of the air force, which he as air minister created, was directed at Premier Milan Hodza of Czechoslovakia, which has 3,500,000 Germans, and Chancellor Schuschnigg of Austria, which has about 6,500,000.

Raising his voice to a high pitch and pronouncing every word with studied emphasis, the air minister thundered to an audience composed largely of aviators:

"And so, my comrades, we have all helped lay the foundation of that force which no longer permits Germany to be exposed to impotence and violation of her national rights.

"And if the Fuehrer (Chancellor Hitler) in his Reichstag speech (of February 20) presented the proud record of achievement and used those proud words that we no longer can tolerate the maltreatment with impunity of ten millions of Germans on our borders, then you members of the air force know that if need be you must go the limit to make good these words of the Fuehrer."

Plain Words Used.

In plain language he expressed himself as follows:

Warning Hodza to treat the Sudeten Germans in Czechoslovakia as Hitler thinks they should be treated.

Warning Schuschnigg to give Austrian Nazis the liberty of action Hitler demands for them.

Warning Premier Chautemps of France not to encourage Czechoslovakia too much by, as one semiofficial commentator put it, "clinging to the doctrines of Geneva and adhering to military pacts with other powers."

Warning British Prime Minister Chamberlain that only a "German peace" would be acceptable to the Nazis.

Goering added:

"Our air force will be terrible once it is ordered into action. Then we will throw consternation into those who attack us; then there will be nothing to deter us from uncurbed recklessness. All obstacles wherever we may find them will be overcome."

Goering spoke at the air ministry a short time after Hitler presented him with a field marshal's baton, symbol of the new rank Hitler accorded him in his army shake-up February 4.

The anniversary celebration was observed at all military airports and air force garrisons with flag-raisings, parades and speeches.

The air minister, seemingly beginning a merely historical review, traced Germany's defenselessness in the years immediately after the World War.

He outlined the growth of the air force which began in 1933 a few days after Hitler came to power.

"Camouflaged" First.

It was "camouflaged" at first, he pointed out, but later the development was carried on openly.

Then, on March 1, 1935, he said, the military shackles of the Treaty of Versaille were thrown off and Hitler could show a skeleton air force to astonished Germans.

Official figures on Germany's air strength never have been disclosed, but foreign military experts estimated there must be at least 2,000 first-line aircraft in all categories.

Meanwhile, Hitler further sugared the pill for 13 generals discharged February 4 by sending each a letter of thanks and an autographed picture of himself.

At the same time, Der Angriff, organ of Paul Joseph Goebbels, minister of propaganda, unwittingly put a pinprick into the armor of invincibility of the air force.

It said "extraordinarily hazy weather" prevented "for the time being" planned demonstrations by the Von Richthofen squadron.

American, British Oil Concerns Lose Mexican Appeals

Mexico City, March 1 (AP).—The labor section of the Mexican supreme court voted unanimously to reject the appeal of 17 American and British oil companies against an arbitration board's award which would increase their labor costs about $12,000,000 a year.

The vote of the four justices came at conclusion of a session devoted to public reading of a 112-page opinion prepared by Justice Alfredo Inarritus, upholding the arbitration board's decision of last December on all points.

The foreign companies, with investments totaling over $400,000,000, have declared that if the board's decision, raising oil workers' wages and giving other benefits, were upheld it would force them to abandon operations in Mexico.

Zog's 3 Sisters Get Hair Done And See Girl Scouts Tie Knots

Albanian Princesses Retain Serene Smiles But Suite Doesn't.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 1.—Their Royal Highnesses, the three sisters of Zog, self-made King of Albania, donned sleek broadtail coats today, got a modish Manhattan hair-do, and whizzed off in a big black automobile—to Girl Scout headquarters.

Gay night life, swing music and the American man weren't in the picture. The princesses spent their first New York afternoon contemplating rope knots tied by Girl Scouts and a blackboard diagram of a compass to be carried on hikes.

They slept until noon, and went back to the royal suite afterward to rest some more.

Tempers a Little Short.

Among some of their liaison representatives, tempers were a little short, as they went about their duties of protecting the princesses, but the royal visitors continued to smile serenely.

Interest in the three sisters reached a peak in a comparatively poor section where they visited a public school scout troop.

Urchins, mainly of Irish descent, stopped playing in the street to crowd about the princesses' car and peer in the windows.

Accompanied by Guard.

The Princesses Ruhije, Maxhide and Myzejen were accompanied by Faik Konitza, Albanian Minister to Washington; a guard from the alien squad of the New York police department, and two other men who saw that no one except the immediate party entered their elevator.

The princesses wore tall black hats, two of them trimmed with gold fluting, and all wore perky black veils.

Their visit to scout headquarters was in honor of the twenty-sixth anniversary of the founding of the American Girl Scouts. Princess Maxhide, president of the Albanian Girl Guides, gave scout officers greetings from the organization in Albania.

After that American Girl Scout pins were placed by an officer on the lapel of each princess' coat.

Among the messages sent to the princesses was an invitation to attend a WPA Federal Theater circus performance by a cast which includes 12 Albanians.

In Albania, Accent Is on Last Syllable

New York, March 1 (AP).—Here is the way to pronounce the names of the three Albanian princesses, sisters of King Zog, who are visiting in this country:

Myzejen: Mu-zay-en.
Ruhije: Roo-ee-yay.
Maxhide: Maj-ee-day.

The accent in each name is on the last syllable.

French Chamber Battles Senate Over Labor Code

Paris, March 1 (AP).—The battle between the French Senate and Chamber over Premier Chautemps' labor code moved into its fourth day despite the premier's efforts to end the parliamentary strife.

The Chamber refused to accept Senate changes in the original conciliation and arbitration bill and passed it for a third time 390 to 203.

Both houses stopped their clocks, and officially it was still February 28, when the old labor arbitration statutes lapsed at midnight.

Chautemps won Senate adoption, 178 votes to 68, of the first section of his labor code for social peace by staking the life of his cabinet on the measure for which labor is impatient.

'El Noodle,' Outlaw, Hangs 5 Mexicans In School 'Protest'

Mexico City, March 1 (AP).—"El Tallarin" (The Noodle), Mexico's most picturesque outlaw, has resumed his depredations after long inactivity in the State of Puebla, reports to the capital indicated today.

It was reported "The Noodle" raided the village of Cuatitla, near Atlixco, took a rural school teacher and four other men and hanged them. He set fire to the schoolhouse too.

"The Noodle" does not like the government's Socialist education program.

Britain Enters 2d Phase of Big Arms Program

Commons to Get Budget on $7,500,000,000 Defense Plan Today.

By the Associated Press.

London, March 1.—The second year of Britain's $7,500,000,000 five-year arms expansion program will be launched tomorrow with publication of the annual defense white paper, the official government report.

At the same time, the government's 1938-1939 plans for air defense will be outlined to the House of Commons. Land defense plans will be submitted Thursday and the naval program Friday.

Then, with the entire program before it, the House of Commons will open debate Monday on Britain's mounting defense structure. Prime Minister Chamberlain announced he would open the defate himself.

Espionage and sabotage scares will figure in the debate, it was indicated today when questions were submitted asking the government how it intended to protect rearmament secrets.

Laborite W. A. Burke brought the matter before the House with a request that Air Undersecretary A. J. Muirhead make a statement on an attempt to sabotage two Royal Air Force bombers at Ringway Airdrome, near Manchester.

Britain's war worries were immeasureably greater than when her five-year program was announced Feburuary 16, 1937. Now there is a real war in the Far East and a multitude of powder pots closer home.

Cabinet Summoned.

The second "defense" year also finds Chamberlain charting a new foreign policy without the aid of his former foreign secretary—Anthony Eden—a course based upon hope for a quick friendship with the dictators of Europe.

Today he called most of his cabinet together to discuss with Lord Perth, Ambassador to Rome, the coming negotiations with Premier Mussolini of Italy.

Tomorrow's white paper will furnish a political guide to the defense figures which will be made known during the week. These figures are expected to show an increase of more than $250,000,000 above 1937-38 costs.

The Army probably will take $500,000,000, compared with $410,000,000 last year; the Navy perhaps $75,000,000 to $100,000,000 above last year's $525,000,000, and the air force probably will get increases matching those of the Army.

King George is taking a hand in spurring royal air force expansion. It was announced that the King, who saw air force service during the World War, would visit aircraft factories at Birmingham and Coventry March 10.

Confer on Building.

Naval experts of the United States, Great Britain and France met at the fireign office to consider Japan's refusal to divulge her naval building plans, but reached no decision on whether to retaliate by building warships of more than 35,000 sons.

The foreign office said the conference probably would be followed by several others before any decision was made on invoking the "escalator" clause of the 1936 London Naval Treaty.

This treaty—not signed by Japan—provides that powers which signed it by common agreement may build warships as large as they believe necessary if they find a nonsigning power is building ships larger than the treaty allows. The treaty fixes the maximum size of warships at 35,000 tons.

New "Spy Scare' Develops.

Copyright, 1938, by the United Press.

London, March 1 (U.P.).—Sensational charges of widespread espionage and sabotage of Britain's new military airplanes were placed before Parliament tonight as the air ministry admitted officially it was running down a "spy scare" involving the royal air force's newest bombing planes.

Japanese Drive On Stronghold Of Communists

Chinese Army of 100,000 'Totally Demoralized,' Invaders Say.

By the Associated Press.

Shanghai, March 2 (Wednesday). Japanese, driving forward almost without opposition at the western end of the Lunghai battle front, today indicated they would strike next westward at Shensi province, Communist stronghold.

A Chinese army of 100,000 was fleeing in southern Shansi province, leaving Japanese in control of virtually all the vast area to the north and east of the Yellow River.

Japanese planes were reported reconnoitering over Tungkwan, gateway to Shensi, and other cities near the border. One column was said to have crossed the Yellow River and occupied Wupao, first town to be taken by the Japanese in Shensi province.

Fleeing Chinese Pursued.

The main force continued to pursue the retreating Chinese through southern Shansi.

A Japanese army spokesman said Japanese planes had bombed the headquarters of Gen. Chu Teh, commander in chief of the Communist Eighth Army.

Japanese said the Chinese forces were "totally demoralized" and that many large straggling groups had been trapped in the snow-blanketed mountains.

In an effort to prevent the Japanese from outflanking them, Chinese forces in Honan province drove westward along the Yellow River toward the Shansi border.

In Shanghai, sharp tension developed when a Japanese sentry shot and killed a fleeing Chinese within the British sector of the International Settlement. British authorities said their own sentries were endangered by the shooting and indicated they were considering a strong protest to the Japanese command.

Another incident occurred when 300 French and Italian sailors fought a free-for-all along Shanghai's famous "blood alley." ("Blood alley" is a short street in the foreign-controlled section lined with cabarets and cafes frequented by sailors.)

The fight started over the rival affections of two sailors for a Russian taxi dancer. Five sailors, one with an ear lopped off, were removed to hospitals when the police restored order.

American Active for China.

Hongkong, March 1 (U.P.).—Charles Healy Day, of New York, was reported today to be directing the assembly of British and American planes for China's rehabilitated air force.

China's unexpected challenge to Japan's overwhelming aerial supremacy is due to recently imported British fighting planes of high speed, according to reliable reports.

British Honor Officers Of U.S. Leaving Tientsin

Tientsin, China, March 1 (AP).—Col. Joseph A. McAndrew and other officers of the United States Fifteenth Infantry were guests of honor tonight at a farewell dinner tendered by the British civilian community of Tientsin.

The regiment, stationed at Tientsin for a quarter century under the Boxer protocol of 1901, shortly will be permanently withdrawn, to be replaced by a detachment of marines.

Inn Near Hamlet's Grave Burns, 3 Die in Inferno

Copenhagen, March 1 (AP).—A man and a woman were killed in leaps from the fourth floor of the hotel at Elsinore today when fire destroyed the inn, which has housed thousands of visitors to Hamlet's grave. The hotel's cook was burned to death and damage was estimated at $125,000. All victims were Swedish.

When other clipper masters called on that hardy Nantucketer, Capt. Ezra Lawrence, he was sure to serve hot buttered rum if the weather were chilly. The recipe he used he had gotten from his grandfather and we got it from his great grandson—and it's delicious!

"A good full measure of Virgin Islands rum in a large glass, about a teaspoon of butter, a spoonful of sugar, fill up with very hot water, sprinkle on nutmeg freely."

To make this recipe nowadays, you need Government House Rum, the principal rum from the Virgin Islands. A sound, honest rum, distilled directly from cane juice.

HazenAppoints 101 Citizens to Back Car Drive

Commissioner Hopes Used Automobile Sales Drive Will Improve Traffic.

Active support for the drive to get a better type of used cars in operation on the streets of Washington has been pledged by Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen, who has appointed a committee of 101 citizens to aid in the campaign to be conducted during the week of March 5 to 12.

Complete co-operation in the local observance of the period, to be known as National Used Car Exchange Week, was also announced last night by R. J. Murphy, manager of the Washington Automotive Trade Association. He emphasized that the drive would have the assistance of all of the automobile dealers of the city.

First National Move.

"I am confident that National Used Car Exchange Week will be an unqualified success here," he said. "Used car stocks on hand provide a wide range of the best values in the history of the industry.

"The dealers who are members of my association have just completed arrangements for the opening of the campaign to get the drivers of Washington to operate better cars."

National Used Car Exchange Week, sponsored by all the automobile manufacturers in the United States, marks the first time that the entire industry has co-operated on a single movement of any kind or character, he continued.

"Stocks have been reconditioned," Murphy said. "Salesrooms and used car lots have been refurnished. Sales forces have been augmented and dealers are ready for the biggest spring selling season they have experienced in several years."

Prices Are Lower.

Prospective purchasers of used cars, he added, "will be able to buy better cars at lower prices next week than will be possible later on.

"Used car prices during this week will be comparatively lower than they have ever been. Prices today are relatively from 5 to 7 per cent lower than they were a year ago on the same grade and quality of automobiles."

He remarked that sales during the week will undoubtedly deplete the present stocks of used cars and urged "anyone thinking of buying a used car to do so during National Used Car Exchange Week." He also said that automobile purchasers buying used cars in the drive would have "a better selection and lower price" than can be expected in the future.

Automobile dealers of Washington, Murphy asserted, are actively backing the movement.

The committee of 101 is scheduled to hold its first meeting in the board room of the District Building at 11:30 a. m. today.

D'Annunzio

Premier Mussolini rose to power probably would be given a state funeral.

Premier Mussolini, his staunch friends for years, was ready to fly to Gardone to pay tribute at the bier. Until late in the night hundreds of bare-headed peasants stood silently outside the villa's gates.

For 16 years he had lived in seclusion beneath the snowy Alps, among the relics of his World War heroism. His last state honor came on September 22, when Mussolini made him president of the Royal Italian Academy, succeeding the late Guglielmo Marconi.

D'Annunzio was as famous as a lover as for his heroism and exotic writings.

His "room of the leper" contained inscriptions such as "I have in me eternal fire" and paintings of the great lovers of history.

Among his loves was Ida Rubenstein and Elenora Duse.

He lived the life of a pseudo monk, bald even to the eyebrows, and one of his last novels, written in 1926, was entitled "The Comrade Without Eyelashes."

Only a year ago this week—March 3, 1937—the soldier-poet and ardent Fascist announced he was determined to dissolve his body in a powerful chemical bath when he felt death approaching.

"I am an old man and sick," he wrote to his friend, Gen. Achille Starace, leader of the Fascist Party. "I am going to hasten my end. Disdaining to agonize between bedsheets, I am testing my latest invention."

He often had said he refused to die in bed of old age after living "the life of a superman."

The best death, he said, is that of a hero in battle, and once he asked to be attached to a "death squadron" of fliers sworn to die by crashing bomb-laden planes into British battleships when there appeared a possibility that Italo-British enmity during the Ethiopian war might lead to conflict.

Sought Death at Pole.

His last idea of a fantastic death came only four months ago when it was revealed he had asked Gen. Guiseppe Valle, of the Italian air ministry, to fly him to the North Pole and abandon him when he felt death approaching.

D'Annunzio's wife, Donna Maria, Duchess of Gallese, whom he married in 1905 but who left him years ago, was not present when he died.

Late today the body was dressed in the uniform of a general of the Italian air force, in whose service D'Annunzio lost an eye, and a death mask was taken by his close friend, Luisa Bacara, who lives in Vittorale. Bacara assisted household servants in attiring the poet in the air force uniform, resplendent with gold braid.

Called Father of Fascism.

D'Annunzio's Beloved

ELEANORA DUSE.

Gabriele d'Annunzio flashed across the literary and historical scene of Europe for more than half a century as a famous poet, a heroic soldier, a great patriot and an ardent and spectacular lover, whose exploits and romances defied conventions and the commonplace.

He died a defiant but weary old man, one-eyed and completely bald, but the fire of his spirit and the daring of his imagination lingered until the end.

Many historians have claimed the soldier-poet was the real father of Italian Fascism. Certain it is that he gave to Mussolini numerous ideas. Some say he could have led his own march on Rome in 1919, instead of waiting for his great friend, Il Duce, whose title he coined, to do so several years later.

Most historic of d'Annunzio's exploits was his march on Fiume, a march which defied not only his own badly disorganized government, but the governments of the triumphant allies, to whom, he always insisted, "Italian politicians had sold out."

Had there been no World War, Gabriele d'Annunzio might have gone down in history as another of those noted Roman poets whose works were of baffling beauty and whose eccentric private lives were glamorous and elusive.

But so fervent was his patriotism that before Italy declared war on the Central Powers in 1915, he forsook his exile in Paris to return to Rome and urge intervention. He was well in his fifties, then. He had gone to France because of his enormous debts. It took the drums of war to bring him back to his homeland.

When Italy declared war on Austria, and later Germany, the career of d'Annunzio as a hero and a patriot began.

He had completed his required service as a member of the Fourteenth cavalry in Rome in the eighties, and so he enlisted in the army. But men on horseback were seeing little service in the conflict, so he transferred to the infantry. For several months he was stationed in the Carso trenches. He always insisted on being placed in the most exposed positions.

At that time, although d'Annunzio did not know it, Benito Mussolini was crouched in the trenches along the same front. It was to Mussolini that d'Annunzio later was to give his blessing, his ideas, his sarcasm, his genius.

The exuberant spirit of d'Annunzio rebelled against the part he was playing in the war as a mere soldier. He had himself transferred to naval headquarters at Venice. There he took part in torpedo and submarine raids.

Finally d'Annunzio looked to the sky and saw planes, and made up his mind to fly.

"I will achieve immortality if it costs me my life," he said, clenching his fists.

Won Glory as Flier.

Fame rested on the wings of d'Annunzio's battle planes. At the age when many men were sitting at firesides, he zoomed to glory in the skies.

He won three special promotions as a flier, and became a lieutenant colonel. He was decorated with one gold medal for valor, four silver and two bronze medals, and was made an officer of the Military Order of Savoy. In his daring aerial exploits were flights to Trieste and Trent, when he dropped leaflets containing propaganda encouraging Italian residents of those cities to resist their enemies. In command of an Italian squadron later, he participated in bombing expeditions against Austrian naval bases and submarine nests at Cattaro and Pola.

While returning from an aerial bombardment of the Trieste shipyards, d'Annunzio lost his right eye when he was hit by a shell fragment.

Saw War as Failure.

When the armistice was signed and Italy failed to obtain Fiume in the peace conference, d'Annunzio, who always had maintained his fatherland must realize its sovereignty in the Adriatic, looked upon the entire war as a failure.

At that time he was commander of an Italian air squadron at Venice. The peace conference caused him to denounce his own government vigorously.

"Those men in the ministry," he thundered in public speeches, "are infamous vultures. They want to bury all heroism. Italy's rights are being sold to the peace conference for gold—sheer gold. It is betrayal!"

Lashing back, the Italian Chamber of Deputies bitterly criticized d'Annunzio. They claimed he had attacked President Wilson in one of his speeches.

But d'Annunzio moved swiftly and startled the world by one of the most dramatic marches in history. Recruiting soldiers from many companies and commandeering armored cars, planes, tanks and cannon, he seized Fiure at the head of a force of from 8,000 to 12,000 soldiers. The men, many of them wearing black shirts which later were to become symbols of Italian fascism, took the city in violation of government orders. At the request of d'Annunzio, British and French soldiers moved out of Fiume.

Detachments of troops under Gen. Robillant were sent to disarm d'Annunzio and his men, but they refused to obey orders. Then Premier Nitti denounced the poet-soldied as a "man who had committed a misguided deed," and declared the soldiers to be mutineers. Gen. Bagdoglio was sent to Fiume to induce the Italian soldiers to return to their regiments.

Despite repeated skirmishes in the streets of the captured city, d'Annunzio held on with his soldiers. At last, however, in December, 1920, d'Annunzio declared a truce with the Italian government and consented to give up his command, which he had held for 15 months, and surrendered his powers to the Fiume council.

Struggle Not in Vain.

His struggle was not in vain. Fiume and Dalmatia were ceded to Italy. The leader of the original black shirts had held the city in defiance of the world until the groundwork for his aim had been accomplished.

After the adventure at Fiume, Italy proclaimed the one-eyed poet a hero. And shortly after the incident, he returned to his villa at Vittoriale, where he was made Prince of Montevenoso by King Victor Emanuel in 1924.

D'Announzio, who was an ardent champion of fascism, was born in Pescara, Abruzzi, in 1863. At 16 he published his first poem, dedicated to King Humbert I. In 1881 he went to Rome to live, after spending several years studying at Cicognani College in Prato, Tuscany.

Ardent poems, stories and plays, and equally ardent affairs of the heart, became the theme of his existence.

One of Europe's most famed romances was that which he shared with the great actress, Eleanora Duse. He had many dramatic escapes from irate lovers, husbands and fathers. At times he owned homes in Rome, Naples and Abruzzi. He was married to Donna Maria, the Duchess of Gallese, in 1905, and she bore him two sons. The marriage was unhappy, however, and they spearated. But the duchess continued periodically to visit her husband.

For Duse, Italy's foremost actress, d'Annunzio wrote many plays, and at one time she appeared only in his productions. Their villas were joined by a passageway. In one of his plays d'Annunzio revealed a hidden chapter of Duse's girlhood, and they became estranged. But they had loved each other dearly and their love was the talk of European capitals.

Heavily in debt, d'Annunzio fled to Paris to escape his creditors in 1910, and it took the bugles of war to bring him back, not as a poet, but as a death-raining eagle in the sky.

D'Annunzio quarreled with the Vatican, and his works were placed on the papal blacklist. Among his best-known dramas are "The Dead City," "Gioconda," "The Daughter of Jorio," "The Ship" and the "Martyrdom of St. Sebastian," which he wrote in French for his actress-mistress, Ida Rubenstein. His leading novels included "The Triumph of Death," "The Virgin of the Rocks" and "Giovanni Episcopo."

"Live ardently," the poet cried frequently, expressing his creed—and he lived ardently until his death yesterday. He dwelt, indeed, as a medieval lord at Villa Vittoriale, his staff including a goldsmith, who stuck off medals and trinkets for his guests. On September 22, 1937, Mussolini named him president of the Royal Academy to succeed Guglielmo Marconi. The aged poet could not go to Rome for the honor, but often said he wanted to go to the Eternal City and embrace Il Duce before he died.

Entertained Lavishly.

Toward the end guests still flocked to the villa. They would be entertained lavishly for several days without seeing the poet. Every hour or so a servant would bring them a rare gift. Then, on a chosen evening, they would be ushered into a great room where d'Annunzio sat. He would talk to them of life and love and adventure until sunup, and when they returned to their rooms would find thoughtful servants had packed their grips.

D'Annunzio will be buried in his own private cemetery in a tomb already prepared. Mussolini probably will attend the rites, but there will be no blessing of the church.

He will be buried from his own funeral room, furnishing of which he watched carefully and with pride. Above the funeral couch is a richly lacquered ceiling with two rows of small windows, which, in the lamp light, reveal the following lines:

"Prisoner I sing
"Thus I live,
"Thus I strike,
"Solitary and alone,
"Burning I arise,
"Beyond the highest
"Within me eternal flame."

D'Annunzio Inspired Fascist Terminology

Rome, March 1 (AP).—It was Gabriele D'Annunzio who supplied fascism with much of its doctrine and terminology.

He first gave Premier Mussolini the idea of the black shirt.

He started the fascist yell of hurrah: "aya! aya! alala!"

Ruhland Given Testimonial by His Employes

Chief Clerk Cole's Whistling Leads Singing at Dinner Here.

With Chief Clerk Arthur G. Cole whistling shrilly to lead the singing, 150 Health Department employes last night marked the third anniversary of Dr. George C. Ruhland's service as head of the District Health Department at a testimonial dinner at the Harrington Hotel.

Dr. Ruhland sat with closed eyes while his subordinates poured out tributes.

Mrs. Josephine P. Prescott, director of the Bureau of Public Health Nursing, ended a brief eulogy with a quotation from Shelley's "Prometheus Unbound:"

"Neither to change, nor falter, nor repent;
This, like thy glory, Titan, is to be
Good, great and joyous, beautiful and free;
This is alone Life, Joy, Empire victory."

The next speaker was Chief Clerk Cole, white-haired Health Department employe who arranged the affair. He was introduced by Mrs. Precott as a man who always beat her to the office. Other speakers, both of whom praised Dr. Ruhland, were Dr. James G. Cummings and Dr. Melvin Price Isaminger.

After it was all over, the 150 employes and their guests—210 were present in all—formed a line and marched up to shake the hands of Dr. Ruhland, Mrs. Prescott and Cole.

Receipts on U.S. Foreign Loans Slashed in Half

Brookings Experts Doubt Even Present Rate Can Be Maintained.

The Brookings Institution yesterday disclosed, in a 710-page report, that foreign payments on loans and investments held in the United States were cut in half in 1936, compared to 1929.

Pointing out that 1936 payments were 58 per cent of the 1929 figure, with war debts excluded, the Lewis-Schlotterbeck survey raised the question of whether payments can be continued indefinitely on the present scale unless more foreign goods and services are consumed in the United States.

If war debts are counted in, payments in 1936 were only 48 per cent of the 1929 figure.

Drop Is $4,000,000,000.

The exhaustive study was made by Cleona Lewis, assisted by Karl T. Schlotterbeck. Entitled "America's Stake in International Investments," the book presents and then analyzes the following points:

1. Loans and direct investments abroad held by American investors, war debts excluded, today amount to approximately $13,000,000,000, compared with $17,000,000,000 in 1929.

2. Investments held by foreigners in the United States totaled $8,200,000,000 on July 1, 1937, compared with $7,638,000,000 at the end of 1936 and $7,200,000,000 prior to the World War.

The $4,000,000,000 decrease in American holdings abroad represents a sharp reversal of the upward trend that had been in evidence since 1908, when such investments were beginning to increase at a faster rate than foreign investments in this country.

Gold Flow to Cease.

Foreigners have obtained a considerable part of the dollar exchange utilized for such payments since 1934 by selling large quantities of gold and silver in America, according to the report. Such a system cannot be preserved indefinitely, however, it added.

In the field of international investments two major difficulties exist today, the authors said. They are:

1. Inability of foreigners to provide themselves with United States currency with which to pay their debts. As lending and investments by Americans drop off, foreigners can obtain the necessary dollars only by increasing sales of their goods and services to use.

2. In many countries the ability of a borrower to pay would be governed by the extent to which proceeds of loans were used to expand production. In the past only a limited amount of American foreign loans have been employed in this manner. About 70 per cent have been made direct to governments, proceeds going largely for reconstruction, relief, service and payment of debts, and general budgetary purposes.

Many Borrowers Wait.

Notwithstanding the fact that opportunities for profitable investment abroad are becoming narrower, the report points out that large agricultural areas abroad still await development and great mineral resources remain to be explored and exploited fully.

On the other hand new labor and land legislation, taxes and various governmental controls have served to reduce profits formerly realized on existing foreign ventures. If American financial markets were opened to them, there probably would be no lack of foreign borrowers on new loans, the report continued.

It says numerous practical difficulties make the American problem essentially different from that of Great Britain when it shifted from debtor to creditor status. Old and new countries alike wanted the British railroads and production machines that were necessary for their industrial development and employed the loan proceeds to buy them. Defaults were numerous, said the report, and individual investors often lost heavily, as has been the case in the United States.

Possible Crash Seen.

However, early borrowers were willing to pay such extraordinarily high prices for loans that, in the aggregate, the lending nation did not lose. At the same time, thanks to a free trade policy, British consumers were obtaining products of foreign countries at prices that declined as British capital helped expand foreign production.

The Lewis-Schlotterbeck study did not consider significant the $1,000,000,000 increase in investments held by foreigners in the United States between 1914 and 1937 but the concurrent shift of foreign investment from bonds to common stocks and bank deposits was regarded as of more importance.

Short term balances now held by American banks for foreigners probably will be taken out of the country when conditions abroad become more stable and such a movement may be marked by a large outflow of gold, according to the voluminous report.

If these transitory foreign funds should be allowed to become part of the country's credit structure and furnish the basis for a proportional expansion of the volume of credit, their sudden withdrawal in substantial amounts almost certainly would precipitate a financial disturbance of serious proportions, it was asserted.

Woman Given 3-Year Term in Forgery Case

Montgomery Judge Denies Mrs. Maude C. James New Trial.

Mrs. Maude C. James, former Government tax expert and substitute school teacher, yesterday heard Judge Charles W. Woodward deny her attorney's plea for a new trial and sentence her to three years' imprisonment on a check-forgery charge.

The Montgomery Circuit Court at Rockville was jammed with students. The former school teacher is also under indictment, with Roy L. Walin, former treasurer of the Washington Missionary College, for conspiring to defraud the institution of sums estimated at $1,000,000.

Attorneys for Mrs. James, Albert M. Bouic and Joseph C. Cissel, requested time to consider whether they would file an appeal to the decision.

Mrs. James was convicted of forging the name of Mrs. Vashti G. Kirby, of Washington, to five checks totaling more than $16,000. The forgery charges have been pending for four years, during which she has been a patient at the Chestnut Lodge Sanitarium at Rockville.

During the trial, defense attorneys claimed Mrs. James was insane at the time the forgeries were committed and therefore not responsible for her acts. James H. Pugh, State's attorney, charged Mrs. James issued a "very coherent statement concerning her actions" shortly after her arrest in April, 1934.

Mrs. Hartley, 75, Found Dead Here

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald yesterday withheld a death certificate for Mrs. Bertha Hartley, 75, widow of the late James Hartley, police captain, pending an analysis by the District chemist.

Mrs. Hartley was found dead in her bed at 3526 Thirteenth street northwest by Paul Llewllyn, who discovered a note addressed to him by Mrs. Hartley. He found a small bottle by the bed.

Two other notes, one addressed to Howard Crawford, chief clerk of the Police Deprtment, also were found. Mrs. Hartley requested in the letters that her belongings be sent to a niece, Margarite Bertolmann, of Chemitz, Germany.

Contract

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson

There is no other type of bridge contest which affords as much pleasure and interest for the spectator as team-of-four matches. The comparison of results at the two tables puts a truly scientific stamp on the proceedings. It was my privilege to watch two expert declarers in the hand shown below. Their play was identical but, one failed and the other succeeded, because one had an expert defender on his right and the other a mere average player.

West, dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.
Team-of-four match.

East:

South:

◇ A Q 7
♣ 8 6 4

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
Pass	Pass	Pass	1 ♡
1 ♠	3 ♡	Pass	4 ♡
Pass	Pass	Pass

At both tables the play went as follows:

West opened the king of spades and, when East played the seven and declarer false-carded the six, the spade ace was cashed. On East's failure to echo, West shifted to the diamond ten. Declarer won and drew three rounds of hearts, then cashed the two remaining diamonds and the queen of spades, discarding a club from dummy. Now, with spades and diamonds stripped from the North-South hands, both declarers led a club and went right up with the ace.

At one table, East made the "normal" follow-suit play with the nine-spot and by so doing sealed his own doom. A low club from dummy threw him on lead with the king and left him without a safe exit card. His forced diamond return was ruffed in dummy, while declarer discarded his own losing club.

At the other table, East refused to be rapped. When declarer played dummy's ace of clubs, East nonchalantly threw his king on the trick. He realized that if South had the club ten this would do no good but, by the same token, if South had that card no defense could be successful. The one thing that East could guard against was being thrown on lead and forced to make a ruinous return. This, East did by unblocking his club king.

Declarer was now helpless. He could not return to his own hand without using his last trump. Since West still had a spade, it would do no good to do this in order to lead a club toward the jack. As his only hope, declarer led a low club from dummy, praying that East had had the King-Queen blank. But West overtook East's nine-spot with the ten and cashed the queen, for the setting trick.

Lotus Revue Drops Swing For Gay '90's

New Production Here Directed by Earl Lindsay.

By Chanticleer

The Gay Ninety Girls bring a relief from swing in their Tin Type Revue this week at the Lotus. The revue is a new hit directed by Earl Lindsay and has a line of curls and curves who flirt and dance in a disarming fashion. Also billed are a number of variety acts. Nelson's boxing cats are held over a second week. Lorraine Chevalier, a contortionist, and Joan and Bill Swan, lightning-fast tap artists, complete the cast of the show. Al Norton continues as m. c. and pretty Marion Dawn warbles pleasantly to the music of Bill Strickland's orchestra.

Plans for the third birthday celebration at the Cafe of All Nations is well under way and Jimmie Byrd is on an 18-hour day thinking up schemes for carrying out all of the suggestions that have been made. At present, the party offers additional favors, entertainment, novelties and a complete new set of special menus for this occasion. Reservations for the party are being booked. The date is March 10.

Mario do Polo and his orchestra opened Monday at the Pall Mall. He was formerly featured at the Casino Capablanca in Rio de Janeiro and his orchestra has a Southern tempo that won't let your feet keep still. Practice up on your tango, and come tonight to his formal introduction to Washington in a special "Night in Brazil" party.

A combination of excellent cuisine and good floor show is the attraction at the Shoreham's Blue Room. Charles Carlile, of radio fame, sings romantic songs as only the "Romantic Tenor of the Air" can. La Triniata, the Spanish dancer, so popular in Washington, is remaining another week. Also there is the excellent dancing team of Journet and Severin. Severin was seen here with Al Jolson in the "Wonder Bar," and Miss Journet was more recently seen with Irene Dunne in "Show Boat" and in the ballet in "Cleopatra."

The Winter Garden Revue completes its final week at the Bamboo Gardens in a whirl of spectacular dances. Ginger Harris heads the list of lovelies in the floor show, but there are Dottie Dunn and Rod Todney, tap dancers, and a host of novelty numbers to keep the show moving at a fast tempo.

The Hi Hat Lounge at the Ambassador Hotel features a complete new show, headed by W. Chaney and his singing guitar.

Musts on the list for night stepping are the Rainbow Room at the Hotel Hamilton, with Milt Davis, Wardman Park, with Paul Kain and his boys, and the Madrillon, where Johnny Shaw presides. For informality and fun, try Brinkley's, who still hold to their custom of no cover or minimum charge.

290 Bar Neophytes Pass Examinations

Two hundred and ninety young lawyers will be added to membership of the District bar as result of examinations given in December, if they can pass the final character tests, it is announced by the bar's committee on admissions and grievances.

Thirty-two of those who passed were women. The examinations were taken by 748 candidates. Ralph Given, secretary of the committee, has invited any person having knowledge of the fitness of an applicant to communicate with the committee.

Only slightly more than 40 per cent of all who took the examinations passed. In other years the number passing has approached 50 per cent, but requirements have been tightened. Two hundred more took the test than did so a year ago, but there were slightly more candidates in December than last June. (Names of successful candidates are on Page 22.)

Berry Marble 'Is Worthless,' Experts Find

the properties cannot be profitably operated commercially and that the various defendants are entitled to no award. Two quarries have been opened . . . The great preponderance of the evidence leads us to the conclusion that for the various reasons set out in the record these quarries are not susceptible of profitable commercial operations."

The commission—composed of Lenn G. Broughton, jr., S. W. Duggan and Rush Strong—said that in attempting to arive at a value the Berry group produced evidence ranging from a worth of $1,500,000 to $87,000,000, while during the arguments making a claim for not less than $5,000,000.

"Would Mean a Loss."

The opinion pointed out "one of the most competent and best qualified witnesses" for the Berry interests testified that to pay the lessees a cash price for their leases and to assume the obligations provided in the lease terms "would necessarily, throughout a period of years, result in a financial loss to any person purchasing these leases."

Hhe proof offered by the TVA, the opinion said, was very "positive, clear and direct" that the properties could not be operated at a profit, while evidence by the Berry interests was "in the main highly speculative."

The commission ruled the methods used by the Berry interests to prove a "fair cash market value" were "highly speculative" as well as "futile."

They had sought to show the amount and extent of the marble deposits in cubic feet, the quarrying costs over a period of years, transportation costs, the sale price over a long period, and the probable market.

Cash Price Important.

"The question to be determined," the commission held, "is not what the properties might realize over a long period of years but it is what a willing seller, who did not have to sell, and a willing buyer, who was not compelled to buy, would pay in cash for the properties and leases as of the date of taking."

The commission held there was no proof that untried properties could be opened and "quarried commercially at a profit."

Concluding the commissioners said:

"By reason of the foregoing, we beg leave respectfully to report that each and all of the respondents have failed to prove that they are entitled to any award in each of the cases . . ."

TVA Chairman, A. E. Morgan, testifying in the condemnation proceedings last December, declared he believed Berry and his associates purchased mineral and marble leases in the Norris area with "intent to defraud the Government."

Agree to Conciliate.

He testified the other two directors, David E. Lilienthal and Dr. H. A. Morgan, agreed to conciliate the claims when they had reports from experts the properties were worthless.

Lilienthal and Dr. Morgan replied the directors had made statements with "false and malicious inferences."

Chairman Morgan declared any further information he might have on the "general situation" would be available should Congress have an investigation.

Senator Berry denied in testifying that he purchased leases with intent to sue the Government for damages. He charged he had been "robbed" by the TVA.

Dog Saved After 11 Days in Fox Den

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

Iowa Town Goes Wild as Dog Trapped Long in Pit Is Saved

By the Associated Press.

Dubuque, Iowa, March 1.—"Spotty's rescued! He's alive! He's well!" were the cheerful words flashed through the streets of nearby Farley tonight.

Everyone was happy, even "Spotty," a 5-year-old black and white fox terrier, whose droopy eyes looked up from a comfortable blanket near the stove in Emmet Simon's farm home.

"Spotty" was rescued today, gaunt and tired, from a dark, damp crevice 25 feet below the surface. He had spent 259½ hours in quarters which provided him barely room enough to walk about.

A party headed by his master had for ten days dug through solid limestone to free the entombed pet, whose barking, fainter each day, had spurred them on.

Bonfires had guided the rescuers at night. Neighbors had provided sandwiches and hot coffee in the day.

"Spotty" was trapped a week ago last Friday by a falling rock which blocked the passageway behind him after he had chased a fox into a hole at the base of a bluff on the farm where Simon lives.

When the rock was removed today "Spotty" wagged his tail feebly and whimpered. Simon rushed him to the surface, where a bowl of hot milk awaited him. Rescuers leaned wearily on their shovels while a crowd of about 100 cheered wildly.

Then the pet was bundled up and sped to St. Joseph's School in Farley, where Spotty's mistress, Hilda Simon, Emmet's sister, was in her classroom. She had been in tearful suspense.

Teachers declared a recess until Spotty was started for home and his comfortable bed beside the stove.

would be available, Vinson said, for experiments with aircraft, new bombs and torpedoes. Included among such devices are an "aerial mine" invented by Lester P. Barlow, of Stamford, Conn., and a type of torpedo known as the Chamberlain device.

The "mystery ship" experiments would be restricted to vessels under 3,000 tons. Members pointed out they might be considerably larger than the so-called "suicide squadrons" used by foreign powers.

High-Speed Vessels.

Naval officials said the craft under consideration here would be of light steel construction, armed with two torpedoes and carrying a crew of two officers and six or seven men. They would be capable of high speed and great maneuverability.

The committee approved a Navy Department amendment which would permit expansion of facilities at navy yards wherever necessary to carry out the new building program.

Vinson said the committee eliminated a provision which would have added 1,200 officers to the Navy because it did not conform to the financial program of the President. He said, however, the committee would consider new personnel legislation as soon as the construction bill was out of the way.

Representative Lamberton (Republican), of Kansas, in a broadcast address last night urged that Congress delay a vote on the Navy expansion program until next January to permit the people an opportunity to express their sentiment in the election.

Lambertson spoke on a program sponsored by the National Council for the Prevention of War.

army machine guns and artillery Sunday, converged on the city.

The throng cheered Seyss-Inquart and demanded a speech, but all they got was a proclamation, read by other leaders, saying, "A representative of our leader, who is Hitler, is with us."

Seyss-Inquart conferred with Nazi, provincial and governmental officials. He faced the alternative of defying Schuschnigg's orders for pacification or rejecting the demands of his Nazi followers.

Another faction entered the picture when it was announced that thousands of peasants under Josef Reiter, former minister of agriculture, were planning a big rally to demonstrate their backing to Chancellor Schuschnigg.

The Fatherland Front—only legal political organization in Austria—broadcast appeals for pro-government demonstrations in 3,000 communities.

Radical Demands.

While armed units maintained strict order throughout the country, radical Nazis in Graz drew up five "demands" with which to confront Seyss-Inquart. These demands were:

Permission to enlist members freely.

The government must consider the results of the Nazi membership drive as a plebiscite.

Federal and provincial governments must be organized on a basis of the membership campaign.

The constitution of 1934, guaranteeing free speech, must be carried out.

Socialists and Communists should not be entitled to organize.

Graz Nazis, claiming 92 per cent of the provincial government officials and 82 per cent of the city officials, vowed they would not compromise.

Nevertheless, there was hope Seyss-Inquart's conferences in Graz might result in moderation of the Austrian Nazi movement and the recent agreement made between Chancellor Hitler of Germany and Schuschnigg at Berchtesgaden.

Under this agreement, Seyss-Inquart was placed in office and other concessions were made to pro-German elements in Austria.

Plans for a "German Day" celebration at Linz were canceled without warning because of fears that Nazi activities would create too much friction. Seyss-Inquart had encouraged the celebration.

Moscow Expects 'I Confess' Chorus In Trial Today

Moscow, March 1 (AP).—Confessions greater in scope than any turned up in previous Soviet trials were expected in foreign quarters tonight from Nikolai Bucharin, former editor of official Russian newspapers, and 20 of his alleged fellow traitors who face a military tribunal tomorrow.

On the eve of the trial, the press continued its attacks on the accused, calling them "despicable reptiles" and "hirelings of Fascism." A typical headline read: "Death to the despicable traitors of the fatherland."

Russia's "ice floe scientists" joined in the demand for the death of the former leaders. Commander Ivan Papanin, leader of the expedition, said:

"Those bandits should be executed without exception."

though he said he hoped to see constant improvements made in that legislation as well as in the social security act over the years. He said he regarded such legislation as evolutionary, as it has been in other countries. But, he added, he had nothing immediate in mind.

Complaint Against Press.

The conference turned to the labor act after the President, at the outset, announced he had a complaint against the press to pass along. He said the complaint was not his, but came to him in 15 to 20 letters from employers and employes to the effect they never saw in the newspapers any account of cases settled by the National Labor Relations Board. He said either the newspapers failed to mention such cases or put stories about them on a far inside page.

Mr. Roosevelt read a series of figures regarding the work of the National Labor Relations Board for January which showed that 103 cases out of 118 involving strike situations had been settled by agreements in accord with the labor relations act. He cited several other sets of figures, indicating a large proportion of settlements in labor disputes of one kind or another.

Asked when he would hold his conference on the railroad situation, the President said he did not know. Asked if progress was being made in the preparation for the conference, he said he did not know. Asked about the proposals of small businessmen for measures to combat the depression, he said Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper had reported his department had analyzed about 1,900 of the suggestions and had 8,000 more to examine. Reading from Roper's letter, the President said the analysis so far indicated that self-help among the small businessmen was well nigh lacking.

With Tongue In Cheek.

Representative Nichols' bill ceding most of the District of Columbia back to Maryland was undoubtedly drawn with tongue in cheek. It was the Oklahoman's reply to recent criticism of the manner in which Congress has handled local affairs. Of course, his bill will not be pushed. Mr. Nichols would probably be one of the first to reject such a proposal if it were taken seriously.

Judging from the rapid movement of District residents into Maryland suburbs, however, many of them would welcome Free State control over all the residential areas of the city. It is Congress that would never permit such a solution of the suffrage problem. Congress rightly clings to the magnificent objective of developing here a great city that will be a worthy Capital of the Nation. To relinquish control over all land of the District that the Government does not own would seriously interfere with that ideal.

Already the Federal Government owns approximately 30 per cent of Washington's land area. If the remainder should be re-ceded to Maryland the Federal section would still have to maintain a separate police force, a fire-fighting agency, water and sewer systems, a street maintenance and lighting department, a traffic department and agencies for operation of the major parks, the Zoo and other public institutions.

It would also have to maintain the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, and a system of courts for the diminished Federal City. There would have to be a school system to educate the children of Congressmen and other officials temporarily in Washington, who would not be entitled to use of the Maryland or Virginia schools without payment of special tuition.

Could the Government maintain these services for the meager $5,000,000 it now contributes to the District's annual budget? There is good reason to believe that it could not. If Mr. Nichols would consider the problem from this angle, he would doubtless quickly discard his re-ceding bill and in its place sponsor a plan to achieve a more equitable allocation of expenses.

The most unfortunate aspect of the Nichols bill is the implication that an impossible solution is the only alternative to continuation of the present unsatisfactory relationship between the Federal and local governments. That, of course, is not the case. Washington can fulfill its destiny as a great capital without denying its inhabitants the advantages of responsible municipal government. Indeed, the perpetuation of disgraceful records in crime and disease is indication that the present situation is actually operating to prevent the consummation of high ideals.

D'Annunzio.

Gabriele d'Annunzio, dead on the eve of his seventy-fifth birthday, was a man who from early youth to eccentric old age never ceased playing the role of enfant terrible. He was really happy only when he was doing something spectacular, and to achieve this end he was generally prepared to go to fantastic lengths.

It is difficult for a hard-pressed generation, to which romance seems largely an escape from grim reality, really to understand the rapturous acclaim d'Annunzio received when his star first rose on Europe's literary horizon. His artistic work now appears as one in which there are real flashes of genius, but often overlaid with much that is tawdry, decadent and even merely dull.

Actually the present era knows d'Annunzio much less as a poet and novelist than as a swashbuckling figure in the war and postwar period, and particularly as the precursor of Mussolini and the very pragmatic Fascists. The poet's seizure of Fiume in 1919, with the aid of a private black-shirt army, set the stage for what was to happen in Italy three years later. The march on Fiume was the lineal ancestor of the march on Rome.

After that event d'Annunzio was crowded out of the spotlight by Mussolini. More and more, therefore, the poet crept into himself, making of his fantastic castle on Lake Garda the imaginary center of a mythical kingdom in which the Renaissance urge of the Prince of Monte Nevoso (as d'Annunzio had become) could be indulged to the full.

His moment of glory and triumph was over. Stark realism had stolen the stage from romance. And d'Annunzio had been relegated to the past as that paragraph of history which is often far more pathetic than comfortable oblivion.

Mr. Baruch's Testimony.

There has been much thoughtful testimony on current economic problems before the Senate unemployment committee in recent weeks. But none of it has been as much to the point as the statement of Bernard M. Baruch, who on Monday expressed the opinion that "unemployment is now traceable more directly to Government policy than to anything that business could or should do."

In leading up to this conclusion, which he reached "with regret," Mr. Baruch stressed the importance of deciding whether we wish to retain our traditional economic system, based upon the individual pursuit of gain, or whether we prefer "the new European ideas of state regulation and the fear of punishment." If we continue to blunder between "separate and diverse" ideas, he asserted, neither business nor Government will be able to bring acute unemployment under control.

Mr. Baruch is by no means alone in his conviction that evidence of governmental determination to preserve capitalism would rapidly hasten recovery and re-employment. And one of the most important specific contributions to such a recovery movement would, as the witness pointed out, be afforded by modifications of the taxes on capital gains and undistributed profits.

Revision of these taxes for the purpose of securing "maximum revenue and maximum recovery" is certainly essential if we wish to provide a basis for capital expansion and development of new enterprises in the accustomed way. Taxation imposed for such ulterior purposes as punishment, industrial regulation or advancement of a particular social theory is inimical to the economic system as such.

Mr. Baruch has thrown an illuminating light upon the grave fundamental issue that underlies discussion of the Administration's tax policies as well as other aspects of New Deal regulatory laws. Too often critics attack details of a particular legislative measure without showing an understanding of its significance in the general scheme.

Mr. Baruch linked his discussion of punitive tax laws directly to the grave social problem of unemployment. And then he warned that to deal successfully with unemployment questions we must consciously adhere either to the system of economy that we have or else accept some more or less revolutionary substitute. Having made that choice, our policies have to be adapted to suit it.

Many critics of the Administration have reached similar conclusions, but few carry as much weight in this respect as does Mr. Baruch. His record fully attests the sincerity of his support of reforms designed to correct economic evils without overthrow of existing institutions. He is a friendly commentator who approves of many of the objectives which the Administration seeks to attain. His candor testifies to the grave anxiety with which the well-informed view an economic picture where the shadows grow deeper, not because the Government lacks power, but because its purposes are fumbling and confused.

The Country Doctor.

Take it as a general rule that the country doctor of today drives a good car and, part of the time at least, drives it over fairly good roads. As a consequence, he covers about 10 times the amount of territory covered by his father in horse and buggy days. But now and then and here and there the weather man and the county commissioners shoot him back a generation, so that he has to ride a horse or use shank's mare.

Times have changed, but despite a wider knowledge and new-fangled devices, the country doctor is essentially what he was years ago; a willing slave to duty happy in the consciousness that his work is well done and that he has the respect, trust and affection of his people. And he is sometimes not only a slave but a martyr to duty.

Such a case is noted in an Associated Press dispatch from Cedarville, W. Va. Dr. James Henry Chapman, 72, late at night saddled his horse and rode out into the hills and a hailstorm to answer a sick call. When his horse could go no further the old doctor proceeded afoot, tumbled over a cliff and died of exposure.

It is an old, old story told in many different ways by fictionists as well as news reporters. But it never fails to capture the imagination and to strengthen one's faith in human nature.

Our Nazi Formations.

Recent controversies involving the Amerika-Deutsche Volksbund seem to account for renewal of the order from Berlin that all German citizens must resign from that organization at once. The Nazi high command does not wish to be held responsible for the bund's provocative activities. So it is divorced from what might be interpreted to be official direction from Germany. In addition to ordering German citizens out of the Nazi league here, they have forbidden it to display the German flag.

So far as it extends, the order is undoubtedly constructive. To permit the organization of German citizens living in this country in order to spread Nazi propaganda would be an intolerable affront to the United States. Unfortunately, however, this action does not necessarily mean that Germany has abandoned all interest in the spread of her current doctrines in the United States.

A recent address by Dr. Wilhelm Frick, of Hitler's cabinet, announced a sort of protective interest in people of German blood living in other countries. "Germany must demand," he said, "that her brothers outside her borders be safeguarded in cultural and racial respects." What that policy may mean is apparent in Austria and was further emphasized by Gen. Goering in Berlin yesterday. So long as the Third Reich clings to it, the mere ousting of German citizens from the Amerika-Deutsche Volksbund will not provide reliable assurance against Nazi interference with our domestic affairs.

It is pointed out in a dispatch from Berlin that the current order does not affect the relationship between the League for Germanism Abroad and American organizations. This league was specifically created for co-operation with organizations of former Germans now holding citizenship in other countries. Apparently the Hitler regime is still interested in Nazi propaganda here, but prefers to have it carried on by American citizens.

Even so, the order announced by Ambassador Dieckhoff helps to clarify the situation, for citizens of this country are subject only to the control of our own Government. If the league of American Nazis violates the law it will have to meet the consequences with no possibility of appeal to Berlin.

A Blow To Company Unions.

In upholding the right of the National Labor Relations Board to order an employer to withdraw recognition of a company union the Supreme Court was able to cite precedents antedating passage of the Wagner labor relations act. A similar question had arisen under the railway labor act of 1926 and the court had then held that "employer recognition of a company union might be enjoined and the union 'disestablished' as an appropriate means of preventing interference with the rights secured to employes by the statute."

The national labor relations act not only authorizes the NLRB to order abandonment of unfair practices, but permits it to take affirmative action to carry out the policy of the act. In the case involving the Pennsylvania Greyhound Lines, there was no contest over the order that the company desist from certain unfair practices. The only question was whether the order to withdraw recognition of the union was an appropriate means for carrying out the purposes of the labor relations act. The Supreme Court, overruling the decision of a lower court, held that it was, in view of all the circumstances.

This conclusion does not mean that in the future the NLRB may indiscriminately order employers to withdraw recognition of company unions, even if such employers have been convicted of unfair practices. It does, however, provide protection against the use of existing company unions to obstruct bona-fide self-organization by employes. Moreover, the Supreme Court was careful to point out that under the Wagner labor relations act the NLRB's findings of fact "if supported by evidence shall be conclusive."

Thus, if the board concludes that the existence of a company union is an obstacle to collective bargaining through representatives of the employes' own choosing the courts are not likely to challenge that opinion.

It is evident, therefore, that the Greyhound Lines decision validates the exercise of very great discretionary powers in dealing with established company unions. Although the decision is not strictly precedent-breaking, it is certainly very important from the board's viewpoint and from that of independent labor organizations.

The Dog House Club.

Lives there a man with soul so dead who never to his wife has said: "I completely forgot this was our wedding anniversary?"

Marriages are undoubtedly made in heaven. But since seraphim are not generally associated with filing systems it becomes a mundane responsibility to recall the recurrent anniversaries. And it is tribute to the persistent ingenuity of the human spirit that this responsibility is now being adequately met.

The "D. H. C." is the organization designed thus to help husbands hurdle handicaps to household happiness. Organized in the Bronx, the Dog House Club has grown to meet the need until auxiliary "kennels" are now flourishing in several States. Membership is composed of husbands who have been "in the dog house" for forgetting an important anniversary. The aim is to help husbands stay out of said dog house hereafter. The method is in the hands of an efficient club secretary who keeps tab on all members' wedding anniversaries and their wives' birthdays and sends gifts accordingly.

In these uncertain times it would be premature to predict the future of even so very promising a social experiment. One danger should certainly be noted. Every local of the D. H. C. should make certain that its secretary is unmarried. Otherwise, when her husband became eligible for membership she would be forced to send herself presents. And with the club dues what they are anyway this might soon lead to dissolution.

One need not expect a stable government where those in power are devoid of horse sense.

A number of critics are saying the Administration has no foreign policy. They don't know what they're talking about. Many of its domestic policies are foreign.

"The Bear That Walks Like A Man."

A Spanish Symposium

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is a sad commentary on the intellectual life of America that a student of the social sciences can return from a tour of Nationalist Spain and blandly relate that everything there is fine and dandy. Dr. Thorning, who is chairman of the department of social sciences at Mount St. Mary's College, says in his recent article in The Post that he draws on "the cheerful notes of a traveler rather than upon the overstuffed portfolio of a political analyst." Well, it must be admitted that he maintains a highly cheerful note.

He is debonnair, chatty. He tells what lots and lots of bathers there are at San Sebastian, what fun the night life in Seville. Bombs? Only one chance in 10,000 that one of them will hit you. If you didn't know it, you'd hardly suspect that bloody battles are going on and thousands of civilians are being slaughtered. But along with all his cheerful chat about things that aren't of any consequence, Dr. Thorning makes it his business to convey the idea that everything connected with the political and social program of Nationalist Spain is fine and dandy, too.

Now it is well known that apart from the foreign aggressors the strongest group in Nationalist Spain is the falangists, the Fascists that is, whose avowed purpose is the establishment of a totalitarian state.

In their manifeso they make no bones about it. And Franco himself has several times expressed his intention to establish a totalitarian state, a dictatorship on the plan of Italy. But Dr. Thorning dismisses the thought with a stroke of the pen. Didn't Franco in a personal interview with him expressly repudiate the term fascism? And didn't he himself see more parade of military might during one week in Paris, in the course of the hotel and cafe employes' strike, than he did throughout his entire sojourn in a country in the throes of civil war?

Dr. Thorning does not see Spain as an international pawn on which the aggressors, Italy and Germany, are staking thousands of men and billions of dollars. He does not see that Franco, representing the forces of reaction at home, is a puppet whom the Fascist nations would set up to protect their interests. To Dr. Thorning the civil war is "an adventure in social reorganization." Pity that he does not recognize the direction in which Franco and his Fascist supporters would without question push that reorganization—towards another Italy, another Germany, another totalitarian state, with all that that means in human degradation, in repression, in exploitation of the masses, and in spiritual desolation.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: For the past year and a half I have been disgusted with The Post's one-sided treatment of the news from Spain. Often I was tempted to cancel my subscription and prevail upon others to do likewise. I refrained from doing so for several reasons.

Now I should like to compliment you on your giving space to Dr. Thorning's Spanish impressions. Not only do I happen to be a student of Spanish affairs but I came to Washington from Spain two years ago. I can say that articles like Dr. Thorning's will do much to correct the distorted view which Leftist propaganda has given of the Spanish crisis.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As a subscriber to The Post, who has upon occasion been rather critical of the character of some of the matter appearing therein, I feel that it is only fair to be equally outspoken when I read something in The Post which I regard as being exceptional merit.

An article on conditions in Spain, written by Joseph Thorning, appeared in a recent issue, and it seemed to me that it was a most excellent article—although portraying a much different picture from the usual newspaper story regarding that troubled land. I hope we may have more of such articles.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As a reader of The Post I would suggest that, inasmuch as you have presented the pictures of the rebel Franco and his aids for the edification of your readers, you now present the picture of the President of the Spanish Republic. The latter feature will be more pleasing to a vast majority of Post readers. I assure you.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I was delighted to read the recent article touching upon Spain in your columns from the pen of Dr. Joseph Thorning, who writes extremely well, interestingly and authoritatively. Indeed, I regard him as one of the ablest priests among my very wide acquaintance in the Catholic Church.

Needless to say, I hope that this is but the beginning of a series of articles from Dr. Thorning.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I want to compliment The Post upon the splendid article by Joseph F. Thorning entitled "A Visit to Nationalist Spain," in the issue of February 15. This article is exceptionally well written and very clear. It seems to me that it gives the reader a much truer picture of the situation than he gets from most things written about Spain.

I hope you will print more like it.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Knowing the interest of your readers in the Spanish civil war, I should like to present a few observations made after two weeks in New York. I offer the following evidence that the Spanish population of New York is overwhelmingly pro-loyalist.

At the beginning of the rebellion, La Prensa, at that time the chief Spanish newspaper in New York, attempted to take a pro-rebel stand, but the immediate reaction in loss of readers caused that paper to reverse itself. La Prensa did not, however, take a militant pro-loyalist position. That a vigorous pro-loyalist position was demanded by the Spanish-speaking people of New York was shown by the appearance of another newspaper, La Voz, which is unhesitatingly pro-loyalist.

I have walked through the Spanish quarter of New York City trying to buy books and newspapers about rebel Spain and in only one store could I find anything from Franco's side, and that shop had one little magazine from Galicia and at least a dozen newspapers and magazines from loyalist Spain. Spanish publications from loyalist Spain can be bought all over the city.

I have been told that if one knows the password he can get a few rebel publications, but that because of the known loyalist sympathy through the Spanish quarter, rebel items are never shown openly.

The Question Of Summer Concerts.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A supplement is necessary, I believe, fully to rebut the implication of the letter published in your paper on February 26 and signed by Mr. F. R. Ohl.

I think the management of the National Symphony Orchestra is in favor of summer concerts because it not only satisfies the desire of people to hear good music, but also tutors many into liking it. That is the purpose of the formation of the association. It is very seldom that a symphony orchestra has an attendance in person of some 8,000 or 9,000 persons. One could reasonably presume that when the summer series was over a good part of the audience wanted more music and went to the regular season concerts—people who never went before. How could the management not want to have these concerts?

You may ask if this is true why did the association not give summer concerts again in 1936 and 1937? The concerts of 1936 were not sponsored by the association. The musicians preferred to run them on a co-operative basis. The association did not have any funds or other means to aid these concerts but did lend some instruments and fixtures necessary to a good concert. The audience did its part by its attendance.

But the musicians were not in favor of summer concerts in 1937 on these same terms. Giving three concerts a week besides rehearsals is a lot of work. Their compensation did not warrant half their efforts. They must live as well as play. I venture to say they received not more than $30 a week for their services.

When the National Symphony Orchestra sponsored the concerts in 1935 their caliber was of the highest. They gained attention everywhere—all over the world.

Here is why they were successful. And one cannot deny that their success was due mainly to the financial backing they had. In view of the receipts from the rental of seat pads and chairs, which was almost $21,000, and a subsidy from the Federal Emergency Relief Administration of $5,600 toward the pay roll of the musicians, the venture lost almost $1,000. If the Government had not provided the barge, the cost of one would have increased the loss substantially. Its success was due, in spite of the loss, to a fair contribution of money by the Government which the people failed to give.

The association desires to pay the musicians a fair salary for their efforts and as much as it possibly can. Certainly people who attend their regular concerts feel that they deserve much for their accomplishments. But what could the association do in the summer of 1936? There was no barge contributed by the Government, there was no appropriation from the FERA and the musicians could not take less than nor could the association give them the minimum pay required by the union. It had no money, but a deficit, from the previous season. The musicians that year worked out a plan with the union in regard to pay and gave the concerts themselves—to their misfortune and disappointment.

In 1937 the National Symphony was in the same position as in 1936. It could do nothing, and the musicians learned by practical experience that it takes more than admissions to pay their expenses.

Now, someone asks about summer concerts. I suggest he ask the people, not the association. The association, I feel sure, wants them as much as anyone else. But it is the public who makes them possible. The association is the force that can give them, but it needs the support of the people.

Before we think of summer concerts I recommend and implore the support of the association for its next regular season. For it to disband now would be a sorrowful step backward in the building up of this National Capital. Support the National Symphony. If there were no regular season there would be no summer concerts because there would be no orchestra to give them.

The Post Impressionist

"Back Home."

FIVE months ago a train slid out of Union Station into a dark rainy night. I was aboard, bound for a new job and a new world in New Haven, Conn., a city I had been in but 12 hours in my life and where I knew but one man.

What was it going to be like, I wondered, living "out in the sticks" away from the Nation's Capital where I had worked for the last three years? What did people do and think in an ordinary city where a President and Congress were not a casual part of the landscape? Would I miss the atmosphere of greatness, importance, and power that gives glamour to the word "Washington?" Would I find the tendency to normalcy I was looking for?

I've got my answers now.

It is different here. I noticed first that politics and Washington activities were a very small part of New Haveners' lives.

A Congressman's speech? A Senator's point of view? The President's answers? Just other ripples in an ocean of opinions held by the banker, the head of an industry, the minister, the salesman, the insurance agent, the professor, the editor, the man next to you at a banquet, and the chap who runs a gasoline station. These "other" fellows are important up here. They have ideas about what is what, when you do the probing for them, and chances are their ideas have not come from the District of Columbia.

Everybody seems so tied up in his own little circle of interests that Washington has a hard time getting in. The church society, the Rotary Club, the badminton class, the Community Chest campaign, the murder trial, the luncheon to improve the movies, the local election—these jam your 24 hours a day. I know, because my interests are all wound up in some of them, and it is only by dint of squeezing it in that I keep up with doings on Capitol Hill and at 1600 Pennsylvania avenue. I belong to a town meeting discussion group, too, and that keeps me wondering about Washington. Without that, I'm afraid, Capitol Hill could sink into the Potomac, and I might never know it, and no one would comment to me about it.

It has taken me some time to get used to this. This is what I wanted, in a way. I wanted to be where the "folks back home" were. Now I'm here, and I'm having a rare experience understanding them. This is where the great decisions about Government and national destiny are really made. Here is where the "people" are. Their opinions, their slant, and my slant, not the views of Congressmen So-and-So, cut the most ice. I am coming around to that view, at least, and that is why I'm paying more attention to Mr. Smith, my banker, and Mr. Jones, who runs a store on the corner, than I am to the Congressional Record.

I find a feeling of stability here that I never sensed in Washington, where the swing and sway of politics moved people in and out of your life. Great wooden frame houses with lawns in front, towering old elm trees, the buildings of a great and old university, tradition, history, a touch of the colonial—these put a firm foundation under your feet. Maybe that's New England. Or maybe it is the community feel of a city smaller than Washington. Or maybe it is a more proper perspective, made possible because there's not so much tinsel here. Factories, homes and hillsides; problems you can tackle and solve

I ought to say something about the "New England ways," about which I had heard before entering this area. People have generally "take your measure." There isn't that welling up of welcome or the technique of creating charm on which the South prides itself. You have got to prove yourself first, then doors open. That takes time, and the doors may not open very wide at first. This attitude, which might be mistaken for coolness, comes, I think, from a determined respect for others. A person's rights, beliefs, his desires and his person command consideration, so much so that one hesitates to intrude. In Washington, you might quite casually speak to the man who sits at the same table with you at the cafeteria; in New Haven, you wouldn't.

On the other hand, bus drivers are more friendly, saying "Good morning, Mrs. Smith," and occasionally wishing passengers good night. More school boys and girls crowd the streets.

The absence of black, sleek automobiles is noticeable, and you are surprised that you don't occasionally mark some noted Senator walking along the street. And then, you get a good chuckle when you see a streetcar rumbling along New Haven streets bearing the marker over the front window reading, "Congress-Washington."

Altruistic Dilettantes.

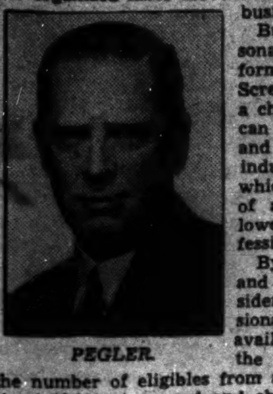
SOME PEOPLE regard as pompous affectation the interest and leadership of such rich actors as Robert Montgomery, James Cagney and Joan Crawford in the organized labor movement in the moving picture business.



PEGLER.

But whatever their personal motives, they have formed a union called the Screen Actors Guild, with a charter from the American Federation of Labor, and have imposed on the industry an agreement which produces the effect of a closed shop in the lower orders of the profession.

By eliminating casuals and others who were considered to be nonprofessionals from the rolls of available extras and by the players they reduced the number of eligibles from about 14,000 a year to about 10,000 at present and obtained wage increases for the survivors.

The rolls are now closed, but may be reopened from time to time if there appears to be a shortage of dress-suit people or men with whiskers or talent of some other type. Extras and bit players must belong to the union, but the employers are allowed to use nonunion actors in the higher classifications at the ratio of 1 to 10.

THE AGREEMENT raised the minimum pay of the extra from $3.20 a day to $5.50 and established a minimum of $25 a day for persons who have lines to speak. The extras and bit players collected an aggregate increase of $3,000,000 last year, and the fortunate rich are proud of the fact that these benefits were wrung from the producers and handed down to the poor members of the profession by their willingness to violate their signed contracts and strike.

The strike vote, taken a year ago, was 98 per cent for a walkout, and the stars who voted "Aye" adjusted their problem of the integrity of the signed agreement in interesting but inconclusive fashion. They decided that the obligation to help the helpless was greater than their individual obligation to their employers, and ceased to consider themselves individually. They decided that collectively they had a moral duty to break their word.

Mr. Montgomery admits that no matter how fine it may be whittled, the point of the integrity of a contract still exists, and the employers naturally ask how they can be expected to trust the signed agreement of a union whose president and other leaders already have shown that they reserve the right to abrogate for any cause which they consider sufficient.

However, the agreement, promising, among other things, that there will be no strike for ten years, appears to be working well, and the only serious threat against the peace comes not from the employers but from an ambitious rival union, also chartered by the American Federation of Labor. This is the International Alliance of Theatrical and Stage Employees, run by a Chicago man named George E. Brown, as president, and locally administered by one William Byoff, as the personal representative of the president.

THE UNION includes the stage-hands, grips, lamp electricians, property men, makeup men and, most important of all, the projectors or projectionists. These are the men who run the machines in the theaters around the country, and obviously if they should be called out in a move to coerce the actors into the I. A. T. S. E. the livelihood of the business would be stopped at the source.

There has been no formal move as yet to absorb the actors and bring within reach of Mr. Brown's union the astronomical salaries of the stars for income taxes and capital levies. Nevertheless, the actors are wary and are investigating the careers of the Messrs. Brown and Byoff.

On the other hand, they present a tempting possibility well worth fighting for, and they have heard that the executive council of the Alliance passed a resolution at a recent meeting in San Antonio authorizing themselves to take over the Guild at some future time.

The actors' leaders are amateurs and altrustic dilettantes in labor organization. They have not yet stood any test comparable to that which would come if the Messrs. Brown and Byoff attempted to put the San Antonio resolution into effect.

The Once Over

Any Ideas For An Anthem?

Here it is almost two weeks since the committee announced a hunt for a new national anthem, and the job's still unfinished!

* * * *

But it's the committee's own fault. It forgot to notify Irving Berlin. And Benny Goodman.

* * * *

The demand for a new one is puzzling many people. They can't understand why a new one should be handed to them before they've learned the old one.

* * * *

What is wanted, according to the anthem-hunting committee, is a national anthem that will fire the American spirit and bring its emotions to a boil. Like one of those swing compositions. It's gotta have "umph."

* * * *

The trouble with "The Star-Spangled Banner" is that at no point in it do a young man and young woman want to turn jittery and start moaning.

* * * *

The words of the "Star-Spangled Banner" have always seemed to elude people. They get the "O, say, can you see by the dawn's surly light" line without any difficulty, but you can detect a slowing up on the second line. (You know the one . . . "What so proudly dah-dah at the twilight's last dee-dee.")

* * * *

Then there comes that third line. Whose bright stripes . . . whose broad stripes and stripped stars . . . stars through the lah-dah-do-dum . . . Boy, does it bunker us there!

* * * *

By writing the editor, running down to the library or telephoning the D. A. R. you can sometimes get straightened out that far, but then you walk right into a stymie. It's that line "Arthur Ramputts we washed while so gallantly steaming."

* * * *

Not one American in a thousand gets out of that without using his sandwedge and No. 2 Baffle Iron, and not one in ten thousand even attempts the line about the Roxyettes red glare and bombs bursting in air.

* * * *

A man named Zephus Crump, of Lemon City, Fla., is known to have progressed as far as the first two lines of the second verse in May, 1864, and a Mrs. Arabella Gupp, of Ansonia, Conn., is said to have traversed the next two lines, "What izzat witch the breeze o'er the towering steep pazzitt blitfully flows, now congeals, now neurosis," blowing out only two fuses.

* * * *

Elmer Twitchell, of Oil City, Pa., claims that as a boy he once negotiated the first four lines of the third stanza, clearing the "so vaultingly swore" line with an inch to spare and getting half way over "foul footsteps' pollution" before being thrown. We doubt him.

A National Wild Life Week has been proclaimed for this country March 20 to 26. The committee in charge, we assume, is composed of Secretary Ickes, Benny Goodman, Elsa Maxwell, Fiorello LaGuardia and a selected group of income-tax payers.

There is a report Hitler plans to rechristen the Blue Danube "Adolf's Creek."

Education In Mexico

Efforts Of Cardenas Government To Fight Illiteracy And Advance Education Reform Seen As Outstanding Achievement.

The following consists of excerpts from an address by Dr. Francisco Castillo Najera, Mexican Ambassador to the United States, before the annual convention of the American Association of School Administrators held yesterday in Atlantic City.

THE NEW SYSTEM of education in Mexico is an outstanding achievement of the revolution. Men of learning from many foreign countries have praised it with enthusiasm.

We Mexicans are thankful for such praise, not only because it confirms the success of what has already been done, but also because it is a valuable stimulus to continue the work.

Those of you who have closely followed the historical development of Mexico, may readily discover the fundamental reason of the social transformation which has taken place there. However, others may wonder how such a reform in education could evolve in a country like Mexico, famous for its high percentage of illiteracy and its former conservative character of education. I must here remind you that the educational reform, which has been carried on since 1921, cannot be fully understood if it is separated from the revolutionary movement which broke out in 1910. This movement completely transformed the whole structure of Mexico, by abolishing a regime that, for nearly 30 years, had converted the government into a gilded autocracy.

Until 1910, Mexico, as far as her economic conditions were concerned, lived in the Middle Ages. As a logical outgrowth of the colonial system of "Encomiendas," the famous and infamous "haciendas" maintained feudal conditions of agricultural exploitation. The "hacienda" occupied the position of a virtually independent and sovereign principality within the state.

How could any government, under such economic and social conditions, put into effect any kind of democratic educational policy?

So much has been written and said on the inhuman and gruesome exploitation of the "peons" working in those "haciendas," that the word "peon" itself has become in all languages, and in all countries, associated with the word slavery. In that respect, the agrarian revolution of Mexico against the "peonage" system can be compared with the Civil War, in the United States, against Negro slavery.

Land Formerly Held By Few.

In 1911 there were in Mexico large "haciendas" covering as much as 1,729,700 acres. Two per cent of the population owned 70 per cent of the land. According to the first agricultural census, taken in 1930, there were 13,444 large holdings of at least 2,471 acres each, comprising a total area of 254,220,451 acres; that is to say, 83 per cent of the total area of all land holdings covered by that census and about one-half of the total area of the whole country.

Of these properties 1,831 "haciendas" were made up of more than 24,710 acres each; and, together they covered 169,886,409 acres. In other words, 1,831 Mexican families, representing 0.01 per cent of the total 16,000,000 population; or to put it more clearly, 1-100th of 1 per cent of the people of Mexico owned 33 per cent of the territory of the country. Up to the year 1930 the problem of land concentration remained acute. It is mostly under the administration of President Cardenas that the agrarian policy has been applied with full force. Under the agragrian code of 1934 nearly 2,500,000 people were entitled to claim land. By the first of September, 1936, nearly 1,000,000 beneficiaries, or 40 per cent of the rural population, had obtained land. Until the remaining 60 per cent also obtains land the ideals of the Mexican revolution will not be fulfilled. However, the economic emancipation of the Mexican farmer is definitely on the march.

I repeat: No national movement of education could be accomplished anywhere and by any government while the feudal system of "haciendas" and "peons" remained the predominant factor in the political and economic life of the country. That explains why before 1910 there was no national Mexican culture in the true sense of the word. Only a minority of the population could attend school; and a still smaller group of the privileged classes could reap the benefits of the university.

More Children Now In Mexico's Schools.

MOREOVER, before the revolution, the culture of Mexico had no roots in the country itself and was but a transplantation of European ideas. In politics, as well as in science and art, Europe was the model. Today the picture is changed. We think as Mexicans. We have a Mexican art. We are trying to solve our political problems according to national conditions.

In 1910, the number of schools supported by the Federal Government did not exceed 600, with a total enrollment of about 70,000 pupils. Over 70 per cent of the people of Mexico were illiterate. According to official statistics of 1932, there were in that year 13,719 rural schools, 5,733 city schools, and 405 kindergartens, making a total of 19,857 schools open for primary education alone.

Eighty-six per cent of those primary schools are supported by the Federal Government and by the several States. These schools were attended by 1,907,650 children under 39,709 teachers. The same statistics show that in 1932 there also were 523 institutions of secondary education attended by 80,194 students under 6,169 professors. Considering the policy of the Mexican government, which increases every year its budget for education, a conservative estimate would bring the number of pupils to more than 2,000,000.

In 1910, less than 8,000,000 pesos, or 7 per cent of the total revenues of the government, were spent on education. The federal government spent 15 per cent of its budget in 1934 on education. It spent 16 per cent in 1935, 17 per cent in 1936, 18 per cent in 1937, and almost 20 per cent of the budget of 1938 is allotted to the work of education. A government which spends today one-fifth of its federal budget in the work of education, is certainly doing something for the welfare of its people.

I shall now try to sum up the essential features of the educational system under President Cardenas.

Education Aims Of Cardenas Regime Cited.

First. The government, before coming into power, pledged itself to eradicate illiteracy, and it is doing it.

Second. We are more concerned, at present, in teaching millions of people how to read and write than in producing a handful of geniuses.

Third. Mexico is essentially an agricultural country. The overwhelming majority of her people live in rural districts. If the agricultural worker cannot go to school, the school must go to him.

Fourth: Popular education should be practical. Its first obligation is to teach the people not only how to read and write, but how to live. The brigades or cultural missions teach primary education, impart practical knowledge of small industries suitable to each section of the country, train labor for farms and shops, thus enabling both farmer and industrial worker to become self-supporting.

Fifth: We believe that an educated citizen is not one who can do most for himself, but one who can do most for others. Against the motive of personal material profit, we preach the doctrine of economic interdependence and social service. The rural school is a center of life. Children attend during the day, adults at night. In the school women learn how to make their own as well as their children's clothes; the men learn how to improve their primitive agricultural methods.

Sixth: We think that in a true democracy the army must not be isolated from the population. The revolution was fought by the masses. The army of today was born from the triumph of the masses. The army and the people belong to each other. Formerly the officers of the army were educated as a class in themselves, an arrogant class whose mission was to obey blindly the orders of the dictator. The army was nothing more than an awe-inspiring machine without any kind of social consciousness. Under these officers the soldiers were but mere instruments, to be used ruthlessly at their will.

Last but not least: Education must replace superstition and fanaticism by scientific knowledge and loyalty to mankind. We feel that education should be essentially scientific. We stand against imperialism, racial prejudice and bigotry. We believe in democracy, in science, and in social progress. We do not want selfish financial interests and the traditional enemies of popular emancipation to take advantage of the blind impulses and the lower instincts of men. We do not think that the fight is over. It has just begun.

Loyalty to mankind must remain the indestructible link that binds all men together through space and time.

Pro-Fascist

By

Claude O. Witze

'The New British Attitude.'

G. WARD PRICE has written a book about Berlin and Rome that is important because of the news from London.

"I Know These Dictators" is a recitation of the history and practice of fascism under Hitler and Mussolini set down as any pamphleteer, working under the tutelage of a Dr. Goebbels, might write it. Hence the contents of the book are hardly worth reviewing. We all know what these nations want us to believe about Il Duce and Der Fuehrer; we all know their stories about the Reichstag fire, the blood purge, the Ethiopian War, the League of Nations and the Red menace.

The book is important because it is written by a prominent English journalist, a director of the London Daily Mail, and appears in this country just as British policy has openly turned to the end of avoiding war by allowing the dictators to have their own way as long as they keep out of the empire's back yard. The fact that Mr. Anthony Eden appears to have much popular support in his clash with the prime minister is encouraging but beside the point. A growing number of Englishmen do accept Mr. Price's thesis that fascism is a marvelous thing for Italy and Germany. His book claims our attention for this reason.

THE VOLUME is divided into two sections; the longer part deals with Hitler and the latter third with Mussolini. The accounts are based on Mr. Price's many interviews with the dictators and are interesting largely because of the personal ingredient his is able to introduce.

The author paints a thoroughly heroic picture of Hitler's career. He finds the Nazi Fuehrer a sincere man, scholarly and sensitive; he came to power by constitutional methods at the head of a coalition government and answered the prayers of the German people. He was an "orator with a positive explanation for the disasters that had befallen Germany" and his message "came as a flash of light to men stumbling among the dangers of the dark." The war against Communists and Jews is accepted as a necessary and laudable part of the Third Reich's history, with never so much as a hint of skepticism, even between the lines. Mr. Price really believes that most of 6,000,000 German Communists have been converted to Naziism along with the trade-unions, Social Democrats and Catholic Centerists.

The book claims that the Nazzi ambition to bring the Germans of Austria and Czechoslovakia into the new nation "may not go the length of annexation." A customs union with Vienna would be satisfactory to Berlin as long as the Hapsburgs are not restored. Full autonomy will be demanded for Aryans in northwest Czechoslovakia with abandonment of the Czech alliance with the horrors of Moscow and Paris. Hitler's interest in the Spanish War is part of his abhorrence of communism, which he believes has practically got France in its grip already. Mr. Price seems to share Der Fuehrer's attitude on this subject, always passing off instances of Nazi terrorism by pointing his finger at Russia. Worse things happen over there!

THE DISSERTATION on Mussolini is about the same, except that the Italian leader's family life permits the introduction of the home touch. "Folks" are always popular and the approach is not confined to American radio programs. There is a good deal of pity displayed for Mussolini in his struggle for recognition while prison doors were swinging so frequently, but Il Duce, too, turns out to be a sort of Horatio Alger hero, with his physical stamina stressed for all it is worth.

It is in the section on Italy that Mr. Price expounds most fully the "peace at any price" doctrine that Chamberlain seems determined to follow. The Abyssinian campaign, which is described as a humanitarian venture among the heathen, gives the author an opportunity to say that he does not believe England competent to wage a war in the Mediterranean. The display by the British fleet at Alexandria in 1935 is called a demonstration of the weakness of the empire's naval resources. Italy is found to possess sufficient power in Libya and her island stations to crush any serious action directed from London. Then:

> The survival of the British Empire through so many dangers of the past has been largely due to the readiness and resource of its statesmen in facing new facts and adapting themselves to fresh situations. Seldom in history has a new fact emerged of such importance as the reorganization of Germany and Italy into highly armed and superbly disciplined states under dynamic leadership . . . Loose talk in other countries about "calling the dictator's bluff" is futile and foolhardy.

IN AMERICA we have to accept Mr. Price's book as an excellent exposition of the new British attitude and the kind of history on which that attitude alone can be based. But certainly we are at liberty to lament the fact that a journalist, of all people, and one from a democratic country, can accept these things without a turned stomach. He finds the German press, for example, carrying on a praiseworthy work for the good of its readers and the government and never so much as wonders what it would be like to think and write without civil liberty. He can write a book extolling fascism for publication in England and the United States, forgetting completely what happened to the last German who wrote an underground paper extolling the virtues of democracy.

"Good Young Man"

By

Grif Alexander.

Our Georgie's such a nice young man! Such a nice young man is he!
So good, so kind, to all the fam-i-lee.
And I'm sure that he never will deceive us! Oh, dear, oh, dear, no!
For he's such a good, such a goody-goody good! Hector tells us so.

* * * *

WITH THE CHANGE of but a couple of words this old music-hall song, popular when Edward VII was Prince of Wales, becomes a comprehensive and critical review of Hector Bolitho's "King George VI."

If you can enjoy a story of a good young man apparently lacking in a sense of humor written by a good young man very evidently lacking in a sense of humor this book will give you a good time.

It is perhaps a grievous and regrettable thing that virtue makes a dull tale; and here virtue hangs like a pall over both subject and author. If there happened to be a speck of wickedness in one or the merest hint of malice in the other, interest might be momentarily awakened; but, no; everything is just too perfect.

* * * *

YOU MAY OPEN the book more or less at random and learn that his courage is amazing (he rallied from pneumonia); his gentle spirit was a guide to nobleness of character and integrity of mind; he views life seriously but not heavily; he has an enchanting humility which enables him to admit when he is wrong; he is not complicated but natural and young; so nice to everyone, no nonsense about him; a great talent for hiding his achievements; an honest man's impatience with humbugs and so forth. The truth of all this need not for a moment be doubted, and a little here and there might be swallowed with ease; but when you [illegible]t it page after page the natural reaction is: "Shu[illegible] this bird is not merely virtuous, he is abso[illegible]cky."

BU[illegible] ALL, perhaps it is unfair to blame either [illegible]r author. George was hampered by being [illegible]stom-made; and Hector was handicaped [illegible] recognized as the leading authority on the [illegible] the royal family."

Any lo[illegible]mocracy, whether its symbol be a crown o[illegible]n constitution, would dearly love to record[illegible] dearly loves this book; but the painful a[illegible]g fact remains: It is a book of which dea[illegible] Victoria would have heartily approved.

Tom McCarthy

Interviews A Flight Steward.

THE KIND of kids that used to go down to the railroad station in the old days and goggle at the conductor who actually got paid for riding back and forth to Chicago twice a week, have a new hero now.

McCARTHY.

They go out to the Washington airport and stand around with their mouths open, wearing the expression which usually accompanies a good "Gee Whiz." And while the pilots are their gods, the hero who has their envy is the flight steward.

The flight steward is understandably young, and they feel sure they'll grow that old some day, while hoping to get a job as a pilot would be just too much reaching for the moon.

The funny part of it is that the flight stewards agree with the kids. They don't affect the old-time sophistication, of the much-traveled conductor. Their attitude is that, "It's nice work . . . if you can get it."

* * * *

THE YOUNGSTERS with possibly the best berth of the lot is Bill Hutchison, who, as the kids would say, "actually gets paid" for flying with Dick Merrill, ocean flier and Eastern Airlines pilot, on the New York-Washington-and-Miami run.

Bill is a slender, well-built young man who was something more than slightly traveled before he broke into work on the airlines. After college, and just for the fun of it, he worked through 25 countries of Europe and shipped on tramp steamers.

"The next step," he said, "was to go up in the air." And so a little better than a year ago he had his application accepted and he was enrolled at Eastern Airline's School for Flight Stewards. There he learned everything from the method of serving a sandwich, or pacifying a nervous passenger.

"And that's the nice thing about this job," he said. "No matter what you've learned there's something new all the time. Now, I'd been instructed on how to make a nervous passenger feel at ease. But they never told me I ought to hold the lady's hand."

The lady in the case, it appeared, was making her first flight, and she behaved beautifully until the plane began to land. Then she began to ring excitedly for the steward. Bill had to sit down and hold the lady's hand until the wheels touched the ground.

"And I want to tell you," he said, "she had a grip like a wrestler. My hand was sore for three days!"

NORMALLY, though, he says he doesn't have much trouble with nervous first-flighters. Nowadays, the passengers accept flying as routine. However, the nervous ones, according to Bill, share a regular routine on their first flight.

"They get in their seats," he said, "and look around with an anything-can-happen-now expression. They smile weakly at the guy across the aisle. And they smile at the steward. And they look out the window and smile.

"But by the time the plane is off the ground they've got a full-sized grin, and in an hour they're striding up and down the aisle as though they'd flown all their lives."

Funniest passenger to watch, Bill told me, is the passenger who often flies his own plane.

"You take Gar Wood," he said. "He's a pilot and a swell guy, but he's so used to doing his own flying that he does a back-seat driver's job all the way from Washington to New York. He arrives exhausted."

* * * *

FLIGHT STEWARDS, for all their youthful appearance, are according to Bill, mostly "settled-down married men. They probably average about 26 years of age. And besides having to pass rigid physical examinations they've got to watch their diet as closely as a movie star. When the needle on the weighing machine goes beyond 150 pounds they're likely to have outgrown their job. It costs money to fly weight.

The majority of flight stewards, while enjoying such runs as the New York to Miami and the chance of spending every other day in Florida sunshine, look forward to getting into some other branch of aviation.

But, what Bill was worrying about, particularly, when I saw him, was not what he'd do when he got tired of being a flight steward, but rather what the March winds were going to do to his red and painful Florida sunburn.

Andrew J. Transue, who represents the Sixth Michigan Congressional District, speaks to the Michigan Democratic Club Friday evening in the late Levi O. Morton Mansion, 1500 Rhode Island avenue. Sharing the platform will be Edward J. Hayes, trial examiner for the National Bituminous Coal Commission and a former prosecuting attorney of Detroit. We quote: "As the meeting will be the first held in the mansion since its rejuvenation, the club members will get a special treat out of seeing the newly decorated building with its spacious accomodations, which include guest rooms, banquet hall, ballroom, lounge, library, dining rooms, cocktail lounge, bar, grill and many other features designed to encourage friendliness among those privileged to use the clubhouse."

* * * *

And 17 baths, we will add, to the glory of Ickes and the comfort of the Democrats, visiting and residential. For quietly, and of a wand-waving sudden, the National Democratic Club of America, occupant of the Morton Mansion, has trimmed up the premises so every Democrat may literally wallow in velvet. Amid such lush surroundings a man might not even care to go out and vote.

Indeed, every prospect pleases, and by March 12 the last carpenter is scheduled to leave, delivering the premises, rejuvenated, refurnished and readorned to the erstwhile political fiddlings of all the Democrats of all the 48 States and the possessions beyond the seas.

For some time this column has carried notes of meetings in the old Levi P. Morton Mansion, and hearing, vaguely, the name National Democratic Club of America. This without suspecting the lush surroundings of the seat, the pillars who support it, or the fact that the temple was taking on bar and grill and 17 baths where a man, or many men, might wash. But yesterday there fell to hand such an impressive book, both in binding and content, that we perused with excitement and flash along the word to you, against your not knowing the joys of democracy.

The book lists sundry Congressmen as "Founder Members," among these Key Pittman, John H. Bankhead, Millard E. Tydings, Pat Harrison, Michael J. Bradley, Kenneth McKeller and Patrick Henry Drewry. The Secretaries of the President's Cabinet have accepted honorary memberships. Their dream formally stated is: Political and social, to bring "members of the Democratic Party into closer contact for their own betterment and for the advancement of the interests and welfare of the American people." Membership is open, of course, to all right-thinking men and women.

"The National Democratic Club of America is a living, puissant thing. It is a going concern with an established home," says the booklet—and what a home. There are 47 rooms and "through the gorgeous wrought-iron doors one enters the handsome reception hall, from which ascent to the upper floor is by a magnificent red-carpeted spiral stairway or by electric elevator. Near the entrance, the ground floor, are the offices of the club, waiting room and the cloak rooms.

"The stair balustrading with its generous and graceful curves sweeping upward, permits a grand view of the heights of the fourth floor, over which an artistically colored dome admits the daylight upon its fascinating iron grille"—and it's dollars to doughnuts that the pompous Republican Party hasn't got anything like that.

Otherwise and at random: "The main dining salon, fit for king or Democrat" . . . "the lounge, suggests the splendid period of old France" . . . "Yes, a charming cocktail room for the ladies, too" . . . "the men's cocktail lounge is unusual in not being modernistic," the booklet captions read. But the "Tavern of the Club, masculine in character and comfortable," ah, there a man might forget the election in a dream.

It's more than a tavern in the town. There are numerous card rooms, a billiard room, a grill "and a luxuriously appointed bar stocked with choice liquid refreshments calculated to appeal to the most fastidious desire . . ." There are guest rooms, roof garden, an information bureau and —shades of Bascom Slemp—an absentee voters' department.

Who contrived all these blessings we pretend to know not. The club, however, did mighty battle hereabouts in 1936, and not so long ago repaired to the Morton mansion where, under a commodious roof, it has become the gathering, focal point, for all the organized Democracy and all the looser ends thereof. The only trouble is this: How will they rout the Democrats from such a streamlined bar, from the card and billiard tables, from the dance floor and the roof garden and from their reflections on the beautiful winding stairs when election day comes and the votes must be cast?

Such surroundings, such a haven, would break a Republican's conservative heart; would make a Socialist scream "whither are we drifting" and a Democrat just glad.

Into two rooms, the Thomas Jefferson and Andrew Jackson rooms—the present-day Democrats will move on hushed slippers: "There, amid surroundings and furnishings that are typical of the era in which these two great Democrats lived and wrought for their party and their country, one may feel a new baptism in the principles of the faith which they enunciated and brought into being. There one may obtain renewed inspiration to carry on a cause to which they devoted their lives, and for which we, as Democrats, owe them deepest homage, and the world its most profound reverence."

We hear that Capt. Eldridge is coming back to town. The Captain, you may recall, is the forester whose duty compels him to walk in a straight line, sometimes for 500 miles. This in connection with the laying off of forestry lines, which disclose the forestry economy. If the captain comes to a house, he has to get over it somehow; if he comes to a lake or a waist-deep mudhole he must negotiate these. He has walked into some interesting things and a marvelously interesting fellow is the captain . . . Dr. O. E. Reed, chief, Bureau of Dairy Industry, addresses the Missouri U. alumnae at the Harrington Hotel today.

Bill Is Shaped To Limit Banks' Holding Firms

Former Treasury Secretaries Would Preserve 'Status Quo.'

By the Associated Press.

Senators Glass (Democrat), Virginia, and McAdoo (Democrat), California, both former Secretaries of the Treasury, agreed late yesterday to introduce a bill to prevent further expansion of the bank holding company structure.

Glass, a leader in the fight for creation of the Federal Reserve System, conferred a short time before with President Roosevelt regarding the measure.

The bill, Glass said, would not be aimed at wiping out bank holding companies, but would be designed to prevent the creation of any new companies.

Friends of Glass said the bill thus would be pointed toward regulation rather than abolition of the holding companies.

These persons said it was considered inadvisable to wipe out all bank holding companies, because many communities have insufficient resources to support locally-controlled banks.

Glass declined to discuss details of his bill, or to say whether it had been approved by President Roosevelt.

McAdoo conferred with Glass after the latter's call at the White House and Glass later announced that McAdoo would join with him in introducing the new measure.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Middle-Aged Married Man, Who "Hasn't Known Real Love for Years," Asks How to Find Happiness.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am just in receipt of a letter from a distant cousin of mine, a middle-aged man who has been married 20 years, which tells his problem of emotional frustration, and asks my advice. Feeling myself utterly unable to cope with the problem, I am turning it over to you, hoping you will know what to say. Following is the man's story, as he tells it to me:

"No matter how old a man gets, he feels the need of a mother at times—or some woman who can, in a measure, take the place of a mother. I look to you as a substitute, as I know you will understand. At least, I hope you will. I am very unhappy and haven't known real love (either of wife or 'other woman') for years. I do not mean there ever was 'another woman,' but sometimes I think I would relish the love of a woman who would be kind, sympathetic and understanding.

* * * *

"My wife doesn't understand me . . . I have been married 20 years and, believe it or not, I have kept my marriage vows, though sometimes I have been sorely tempted to break them. But I have had the strength to resist. The next time, however, I may not wish to have the strength to resist. That's the way I feel just now. I don't know what to do. I'm still a young, strong, virile man, yearning for real love and all that goes with it—but this I am denied.

* * * *

"What am I to do? Look for love outside marriage? Yet, even should love be found outside the home, it would involve expenditure of considerable money, on gifts, flowers, dinners, theater tickets and all other courtesies and attentions, and my family budget would not permit of such spending. So what is a poor man to do under the circumstances? My wife does nothing but nag, nag, nag. My eldest daughter doesn't notice me. The next oldest likes her dad but she is not liked by her mother or elder sister and they jump on her. When I take her part, hell breaks loose. And I think my wife is already working on the younger children to turn them against me, too.

* * * *

"I would be much happier if I could have but a hall bedroom somewhere, where I could have my piano and my books. In the bedlam at home I can no longer either play or read. I have no peace or quietude. I am fond of animals but my wife is not. Please write me words of comfort and advice. I shall count the moments until I hear from you. I do so miss my own dear mother and wish I had her now at my side . . . I think my wife is going through the climacteric, but had no idea it could have such an effect. Personally, I think it is a good excuse for bad temper and mean disposition on the part of many women. Some, I understand, really go insane. I would like to have your views on this subject, too." "CECIL."

Self-Knowledge Needed

DEAR CORRESPONDENT: This, obviously, is a problem for a psychiatrist to solve. Any man who, in moments of conscious sexual frustration, yearns inexpressibly for his "own dear mother's . . . comfort, advice and understanding," is still a child, in so far as his psychic adequacy to marriage or matehood is concerned. This man's barren emotional relationship with his wife is probably his own fault, in that he has consistently failed to play a psychologically mature man's part as a lover. Whatever of spiritual love he has given her has been, not a man's love for his mate, but a boy's love of his mother; while he has brought to their physical relationship, no doubt, a feeling of guilt, and a technique of furtiveness and haste. He has not matured, in psychological ways, sufficiently to experience or to express, ardently, honestly and artistically, a normal man's three-faceted love of his wife. A man's love of his mate is, or should be, spiritual, mental and physical in nature and expression; and it should bear no relationship, psychically, to the love he bore his mother as a child. Only in so far as he emancipates himself from his childhood deification of and emotional dependence upon his mother, is he liberated, psychically, for the mature experience of mate love.

* * * *

He should not fool himself—this cousin of yours—that his iron will and high sense of rectitude alone have kept him faithful to his marriage vows. Those same inhibitions which have made a mockery of his marriage are the powerful subconscious deterrents which have prevented his seeking and finding compensatory consolation elsewhere. Subconsciously he knows he is not adequate to the conquering lover's role, but this realization has not penetrated to his conscious mind. See how doggedly he hoodwinks himself. On the one hand, he congratulates and commiserates himself on his fidelity, while threatening vaguely some day to "lose the wish" to remain faithful; yet, on the other hand, the moment infidelity suggests itself as the possible solution of his misery, he produces arguments against it—arguments that have no bearing on his psychic inadequacy; and arguments that are even slightly absurd. For what emotionally mature man, starved for love and sensing the possibility of embracing it, ever stopped to count the cost in terms of gifts, flowers, dinners, theater tickets, etc.? This man isn't thinking of love in a realistic sense, but in terms of adolescent courtship.

* * * *

This man complains that his wife "doesn't understand" him. Small wonder. I doubt that anyone other than a psychiatrist or trained psycho-analyst could. He complains that she "does nothing but nag, nag, nag." Doesn't he know that an embittered, antagonistic, fretful, complaining wife is, usually, an emotionally starved wife? She may or may not be passing through the climacteric. Yet if she is, her "mean disposition" is probably less due to that natural, inevitable change than it is to sheer nervous tension growing out of emotional starvation.

* * * *

Her husband may find this hard to understand, in view of the fact that she has, apparently, long since spurned his gestures of lovemaking with cold finality. But he needs to be told that emotional frigidity in wives, with its concomitant aversion to sexual intimacy, is nearly always attributable, in the final analysis, to their husbands' ignorance and ineptitude as lovers. The burden is on the thoughtful, intelligent, altogether mature husband to awaken his wife's responsiveness. If he neglects this responsibility, the net result is just about what you have in this instance—complete and painful estrangement of mind and spirit. Sometimes redress is sought in the divorce courts, and sometimes it isn't.

* * * *

I repeat, therefore, that the solution of this man's problem lies in scientifically guided self-understanding; not in seeking a phantom mother in the guise of some other woman than his wife; and not in monkish immolation among his books, his pets and his piano. He should see either a first-rate diagnostician with psychiatric insight, or a psychiatrist. Very likely, the nervous strain of prolonged emotional dissatisfaction has resulted in a glandular imbalance which needs correcting just as urgently as his mind and emotions needs re-education. Until he tackles his problem from within, he can never hope to find happiness with any woman.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Your Figure, Madame!

Spring Fashions Demand New Attention to Waist Slimming Exercises.

By Ida Jean Kain.

ITS A NIPPY spring . . . Suits are nipped in at the waist as never before and practically all of the frocks give the figure an equatorial squeeze.

Fashions in clothes match those in figures, for in the last decade the average woman has taken 4 inches off her waistline, which puts this measurement down to a new minimum for the twentieth century.

Exercises for Waist.

Your waistline depends upon the way you are built and may vary from 24 to 28 inches. According to the laws of symmetry, the waistline should measure from 7 to 9 inches less than the bust circumference. If your midriff has slipped its moorings, combine exercise with diet for double-quick results and concentrate on the stretch-bend type of exercise. The following is an example of the most effective waistline slimmer.

POSITION: Double your silk rope and grasp in either hand, arms stretched high over head and wide apart. Stand with feet together.

MOVEMENT: Holding the hips still, bend sharply at the waist to one side and then to the other. Repeat 12 times, rest, and repeat another 12 times. Make sure that you continue the upward stretch of the arms and pull up with the entire diaphragm throughout.

Here is a test of suppleness.

POSITION: Standing erect, feet wide apart, arms stretched high over head.

MOVEMENT: Keep the knees straight. Twist and bend at the waist to bring arms down and grasp right ankle with both hands. Stretch arms high in air again and bend over to grasp left ankle. Repeat 12 times, rhythmically. There is no use doing this exercise if you bend your knees.

Reducing Diet Given.

Now that you have warmed up, try this more difficult bender:

POSITION: Sit down on the floor with legs stretched as wide apart as possible. Hold arms high over head with the trunk stretched upward.

MOVEMENT: Keeping the head between the arms, bend the upper part of the body toward the right and try to touch the hands to the outstretched foot. Swing the body upward, then bend in the opposite direction to touch hands to other foot. It is important to keep the legs flat on the floor and the feet as wide apart as possible.

New Senator's Wife—Plant Conservationist

A connoisseur of rare plants and flowers, Mrs. Alfred E. Reames, wife of the newly appointed Senator from Oregon, loves the common species as well. Here, she arranges a bunch of American Beauty Roses in her apartment at the Mayflower Hotel.

Wildflower Protection Is Hobby Of Oregon Congressman's Wife

Conservation of Roadside Natural Beauties Pushed by Mrs. Preames; Education of Children to Save Plants Suggested.

By Genevieve Reynolds.

PASSING MOTORISTS stopped by the roadside; plucked armfuls of flowers and shrubs; thrust them in cars and drove away, little realizing that they had mutilated the plant itself. In a few hours the blossoms wilted and were tossed along the highway.

Soon a group of children scrambled from other cars and picked the fragrant blooms. Day after day this was repeated. A woman stood by watching the destruction of the natural beauties of her State. This woman, Mrs. Alfred E. Reames, wife of the newly appointed Senator from Oregon, loved flowers—especially the rare native varieties. Thereupon she resolved to do something about the situation.

Since that day she has worked unceasingly for roadside beautification. Conservation and preservation of natural beauty has become her chief hobby. Nor has her interest in flowers abated since coming to Washington. She plans to attend the National Council of Garden Clubs in New York May 16 to 19 as a possible delegate. Too, she is contemplating a visit to flower gardens in Virginia and Charleston, S. C., when they are at their height of beauty in early spring.

Leader in Home State.

Mrs. Reames is first vice president of the Oregon Federation of Garden Clubs and for thet last two years has served as president of the garden club and chairman of the flower show in her home town of Medford, Oreg.

While a great deal of her work is accomplished through organizations, she does even more in private life to encourage the preservation of the native wild flowers. Some of the most famous rare variations of wild flowers found in Oregon, according to Mrs. Reames, are: Dog tooth violets, alpines (which include the choicer white and brown lady slippers), red bells, mountain lilies, sweet briar, irises (shading from lavender to deep purple and from cream to yellow).

Believing that much of the natural beauty in other States also is being destroyed, she suggests that mothers be made conscious of this condition.

Legislation Proposed.

To do this she proposes two methods—legislation and education.

In discussing these two plans in her suite at the Mayflower Hotel yesterday, Mrs. Reames said: "Legislative measures prohibiting the pulling of flowers and shrubs within a 500-yard radius of the roadside should be passed in all States. However, it will take a long time to get the bills passed and they will not be successful without strict patrol."

"Unless," she continued, "parents and teachers instill an inherent love of beauty in children at a very early age. Most people love beauty, but they want to consume it all at once instead of conserving it for others. So the most important requisite is to teach an honest appreciation of nature—which, of course, entails preserving and conserving the original source."

She thinks mothers and teachers could do this by teaching the small child the names of the flowers, trees and shrubs (including the family name, species, variety), where found, their natural habitat, how best protected and how to pull the blooms without robbing the plants of future productivity.

Long walks in the woods, short excursions to parks or plots or anywhere flowers are found, when directed by someone who loves and knows flowers, is an excellent method to instill a first-hand knowledge and protective instinct, according to Mrs. Reames, who also advocates gardening for both women and children.

"Gardening," she said, "not only furnishes pleasure and a sense of achievement, but is healthful and a good stimulus for those who are shut in, either mentally or physically, a large part of the time. It is also highly beneficial and soothing to those afflicted with nervous disorders, and is a curative for those convalescing from a long illness.

Commercial Value.

She also believes gardening has great commercial possibilities—for women especially—in that there is a demand for good seed, new plants or flowers, and for nearly extinct or rare varieties. Even persons who have little or no knowledge, she points out, can learn by studying seed catalogues, Government bulletins, and by seeking advice and suggestions from the local florist, friends and neighbors.

For those living in small apartments she suggests small potted plants such as begonias, cacti or ferns or window box varieties that thrive with little care and attention.

Dubbing herself a "plain dirt gardener," Mrs. Reames derives her greatest thrill from developing new plants, particularly rare species, of which she has developed successfully a large number.

Paris Stylists Feature Unusual New Pockets

Paris, (U.P.)—Unusual pockets are the features of both Lucien Lelong's and Jean Patou's new suits. The four pockets of Lelong's rough tweeds are buttoned and open at the side facing the shoulders and hips. Patou's suit has a cord trim which edges the collar revers and extends straight down the front. His wide pockets start at the waist and cross diagonally to the hips. A high box hat, with a red pom-pom on the summit, tops the ensemble.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

ALICE HUGHES.

AT LAST I know how a hapless prize fighter feels before 18,000 screaming maniacs in Madison Square Garden when he gets the decision over a more popular pug who is the fans' favorite. Abruptly, he feels terrible—for razz-berries, cat-calls, Bronx cheers, hoots, whistles and even pop bottles fall on his defenseless pate. And the same thing happened to me the other night when I went limp in the brain and consented to be a judge at the weekly contest at Jack Rockefeller's Rainbow Room—700 feet above the white lights of old New York!

The Big Apple has been chased off the local map by the current Waltz Drive, and the Rainbow Room is packed for each of these Monday night contests—orchids for the lady and champagne for the gent of the winning duo. And I gave in, and judged one with Mrs. Sigourney Thayer, society editor of a great afternoon paper who, before her very social marriage, was Molly Cogswell, my former colleague in the ad department of one of the mightier stores. Wearing my 5-year-old silver evening frock, whose flash has never failed yet, I watched the Viennese experts whirl past.

Molly and I soon decided that Dr. Eugene Marcovici and Patricia Morrison, an incredibly lovely girl, were by far the best waltzers of the lot. I also sensed that the overwhelmingly popular favorites were Dr. and Mrs. Heinrich Wolf, of here and Vienna, who did a tremendous hippity-hopping waltz of the old Austrian school. I wanted them for sheer acrobatic grace and fervor, but Molly voted me down because the Wolfs were doing an out-moded, impractical version.

* * * *

So our nod went to Marcovici and Morrison, and rightly—but Molly and I had to take it! We were booed, hissed and all but attacked, until the management rescued us by announcing a special award of posy and wine to the Wolfs.

My old man, sourly sipping soda water at our table, only sneered. "So you will be a judge, hey?" Wrapping my old silver about me, I slank into a windy night. Take a tip—when judging, pick the popular pet, and let justice go jump in the nearest creek!

Judging the waltz contest, noted above, I found that the dance itself dictates the dresses for it. Long tight waists and graceful, billowy skirts for the whythmic whirl in three-four time. Several beauties were designed by the pretty young Baroness Henkl, who also did an exhibition herself. For years the waltz has threatened to come back—now it really is back, and I, for one, am glad of it!

"I can't see why she should act so cool all of a sudden. Heaven knows I never did anything to her—at least that I can think of . . . say, do you suppose she didn't like what I said about Harold?

"What? . . . Oh, all I said was he wasn't good enough for her . . . Well, he isn't. Everybody says he isn't . . . No, she asked me what I thought of him and—well, you know me. I said right out, 'Well Marjorie, I'm just going to tell you the truth . . .'

"Well, that's just the way I am. If I have anything to say, I say it to people's faces. I don't go around talking behind their backs . . . like Gladys Smiley. Did you EVER see such a cat? . . . It wouldn't be quite so bad if she wasn't such a mess herself.

"I'm sorry about Marjorie, but she oughtn't to be so touchy. She's always been that way . . . You remember about the photographs . . . Well, all I did was tell her they looked exactly like her. She thought they were terrible . . . Yes, I just said, 'Marjorie, I'd know that nose anywhere' . . . And then she got all snooty.

"Well I just can't be bothered. I have to say what I think . . . Besides, I think people really like you a lot better if you are that way . . . they find you sort of refreshing.

"You should have seen the shock I gave everybody at the Bingle dinner. You know Hazel served that new plum pudding that some one in England sent her the recipe for, and it was simply nauseating. Well, everybody was trying to get it down so politely—but not me. I just said right out, 'Hazel, this pudding tastes just like old galoshes!' . . . Yes, I said it! . . . Everybody simply howled.

"Lucile? . . . Yes she had on her new dress . . . No, it looked terrible . . . Well I don't care how much she paid for it, it looked wishy-washy. I told her so. I just said, 'Lucile, that's not the right dress for you. You're not a definite enough type to wear prints. You ought always to wear black' . . . Well, she should . . . Especially with her hips . . . I told her that too.

"Bess? . . . Yes, she was there, but she didn't look very well. Bess is working too hard. I told her she was. She knows it.

"Say, did you ever find your hat? . . . Oh, well, there's a lot of people still wearing their winter hats . . . Say, do you know what you ought to do? You ought to get a sailor. Now that hat you've got on—well, to be frank about it, I never have liked it . . . Well, it's too young for one thing . . . And not plain enough for another. It just hasn't any style.

"Do you know what I think? . . . Well, if you don't mind my being perfectly frank about it—I think where you make your mistake is in trying to look pretty in your clothes. You can NEVER look pretty. You're not the type . . . Besides, I do think that as people get older, it's their best bet to go in for style and not try to look pretty.

"Another thing—you should never wear anything very vague. Now please don't think I'm trying to criticize you or anything like that. I'm not posing as a fashion plate myself, and if anybody has anything to say about my clothes I want to know it. One thing about me, I can take criticism.

"Who? . . . Ethel Spank? . . . What did she say? . . . Oh yes, go ahead and tell me . . . Oh, I'm dying to know . . . No, really, you know me—I believe in people speaking right out . . . Oh, but I really want to know . . . Of course I won't be mad . . . What did she say?

"Well, what about my hats? . . . That I ought to do what . . . Take some man along when I bought 'em? . . . She said that! . . . Ethel Spank had the nerve to say that! . . . And to think of the gargoyles she wears . . . Well, of all the——"

Add ripe olives to Spanish or Mexican sauces which serve to give variety to inexpensive meat cuts. Other dishes of Spanish influence gain an air of authority from the use of whole fruit. When Solomon, in his revelations, wrote: "how beautiful are thy feet with shoes, O, Prince's daughter," he saw the tips of toes and flesh tints gleaming seductively through the woven braid of Sandals—delicately molded ankles laced with slender thongs—like lovely, fugitive things caressingly held captive. And so, Andrew Geller brings out of ancient lore the revelation that the feminine foot is not something to be shrouded from sight—but a living thing of grace, provocatively to walk before the eyes of man. Tea Table Talk Turns To Bids for St. James's Debutantes May Be Disappointed, However, Because the New U. S. Ambassador Is Toying With the Idea of No Presentations.

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

It may seem nonsense to some, but it's still sacred tradition to some—this business of making a formal bow at a royal court. So since the dates for presentation at the Court of St. James's were recently announced by the lord chamberlain, tea table talk frequently has turned on speculation as to which Washington debutantes and wives of topflight officials will curtsy to Great Britain's King and Queen, come May 11 and 12, and July 6 and 7.

HOPE R. MILLER.

Fact is, however, Americans who are planting their highest hopes toward three white feathers and a couple of courtsies—one for the King, the other for the Queen—stand a big chance to be disappointed. Presentations are arranged by the Ambassador, and our new envoy, Joseph Kennedy, is toying with the idea of arranging no bows at all. He was, at least, before he left Washington.

As he sees it, or saw it, such a step would save a lot of heartbreak for those who can't make the grade, and a lot of trouble for an ambassador who will be busy enough negotiating weightier matters. In the past, the matter of examining thousands of applications accompanied by family histories, high-powered indorsements, and what-not, has been a job within itself. Shortly before leaving Washington, Mr. Kennedy confided to a close friend that he had hopes of stopping the American bowing business altogether. He added, however, he would not force the issue if he discovered such a procedure would be distasteful to the British court.

Chances are the latter won't care one way or the other and that Ambassador Kennedy can inaugurate something new under the diplomatic sun. If he does he may disappoint the 20 or 30 American debs and dowagers in line for a curtsy and a look at a king, but on the other hand he probably would endear himself to millions of Americans, bred in the tradition of Mark Twain, who consider formal presentation to a royal court the acme of snobbishness anyway.

Mrs. Paul V. McNutt Called 'Ideal Woman'

With the High Commissioner of the Philippines, Paul V. McNutt, staying very much in the limelight these days, Washington's feminine contingent has been wondering about the little woman back in Manila who is reputed to have had a great influence in steering his career to the top.

Some first-hand information came my way yesterday from Mrs. Marie L. Zaharakos, of Indianapolis, who has known Mrs. McNutt for many years and can toss bouquets in her direction on a moment's notice. Mrs. Zaharakos is director of the department of foreign voters for the Indiana Democratic State central committee and she came to Washington primarily to attend the mammoth Minton reception last week. Feted right and left by her many friends here, she has been loathe to leave, but tomorrow she will be off to Indianapolis. Today she will lunch with her friend of long standing, the Greek Minister.

"Mrs. McNutt is an ideal woman," said Mrs. Zaharakos yesterday in discussing the woman she believes may one day be First Lady. "As the wife of the Governor of Indiana, she was distinguished for her graciousness, her absolute lack of snobbery, and her forthright manner that won friends immediately. She couldn't be more attractive, more natural, or more unselfish."

Lucrezia Bori to Sing After Cabinet Dinner

Committees of Cabinet wives have their hands full these days making final arrangements for the Cabinet dinner to President and Mrs. Roosevelt on Friday evening at the Mayflower. Lucrezia Bori, noted singer, will be the featured artist on the program following the dinner. In addition to members of the Cabinet, their wives and the honor guests, members of the White House secretariat, and a few other high-ranking officials are invited.

The President's mother, Mrs. Sara Delano Roosevelt, who has attended several of these annual functions, will not be down for this one as she had made a previous engagement. Postmaster General James A. Farley, and Mrs. Farley, who have cut quite a social figure recently in Florida, will return to the Capital especially for the dinner. On Sunday evening, Mr. Farley and Harry Hopkins, WPA Administrator, were among guests at a dinner given by Carl Byoir, of New York, at the Miami Biltmore.

OF PERSONAL NOTE: Dr. and Mrs. Charles Stanley White will leave Monday, March 7, for New Orleans en route to Guatemala. Their trip to Mexico last year stimulated their interest in countries south of the Rio Grande, and since recently they heard that Guatemala is one of the most interesting and most "undiscovered" of the lot, they decided to go there. They will return around the end of March . . . "Tidings Brought to Mary," play by Pierre Claudel, former French Ambassador to the United States, was read in part at a reception given in New York this week by Mrs. Cornelius J. Sullivan. Since giving up his post here five years ago, Mr. Claudel has devoted most of his time to writing poetry and plays . . . One of his most recent works, done in collaboration with Arthur Honegger, the composer, is scheduled for presentation in May at the opera in Paris.

Olga Moore's story, "The Lion and the Lamb Chop," in a current magazine, contains some pungent sidelights on Capital society. Miss Moore, who spent the past two winters in Washington, in private life is Mrs. Carl F. Arnold, wife of Dr. Arnold, former member of the Civil Communications Commission and now dean of the law school, University of Wyoming . . . Mme. Mircea Victor Babes, wife of the Rumanian Charge d'Affaires, will entertain at two dinners next week—one on Tuesday, the other on Wednesday.

Music Leaders Of Society Hear Library Concert

Music-loving members of Washington society turned out in droves last evening when the Friends of Music in the Library of Congress, one of the Capital's most impressive institutions, gave its thirty-third concert in the Coolidge Auditorium at the library.

The audience included such patrons of music as Mrs. Walter Bruce Howe, who, under the name of Mary Howe, has composed some notable songs. Mrs. Howe is extremely active in work for the National Symphony Orchestra and inevitably is to be seen at Capital concerts. Last evening she was accompanied by the Swiss Minister and Mme. Peter, the latter wearing a simple black frock made with low decolletage. Both the Peters adore music and the Minister never makes any engagements on Sunday afternoons for the time of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra's weekly broadcasts.

Mrs. Tracy Dows, another pillar of the National Symphony, was accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Forbes Watson. Mrs. Dows was gowned in her favorite black, with which she wore a brief fur cape.

Mrs. Lothrop Stoddard, another of Washington's outstanding music enthusiasts, was there, wearing a black net frock and a turquoise and diamond clip. She was accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. L. Metcalfe Walling and Mrs. Richard Hamlin Jones, of Boston, a former pupil of McDowell.

Adolph C. Millers Glimpsed in Crowd

Others in the audience were Mr. and Mrs. Adolph C. Miller, who were with James Clement Dunn, political adviser to the State Department, and Miss Grace Dunham Guest, who is secretary of the Friends of Music.

One of the founders of this group 13 years ago was the late Nicholas Longworth and Mrs. Longworth is a vice president of it. She usually goes to every concert, but absence in Chicago prevented her being there last evening. She is attending meetings of the Republican Committee of 200, but will return in time for the Women's National Press Club stunt party Saturday.

Also missing from the gathering was the treasurer of the group, Clarence Aspinwall, who, with Corcoran Thom, has left on a trip to Guatemala. They will return at the middle of March.

Hans Kindler Conducts Concert

Last evening's concert was conducted by Dr. Hans Kindler, with Mme. Olga Averino, soprano, as soloist. It included works by Corelli, Monteverdi, de Lully, Couperin, Jaubert, Pizzetti and Hindemith.

The Friends of Music was founded to offer people a chance to hear more chamber music than the Capital ordinarily would provide. It also offers funds for the purchase and gift of additions to the music collection in the Library of Congress. This year the committee has announced that it had presented the library with a copy of one of the very first treatises on thorough bass, "Del suonare sopra il basso," by Agostino Agazzari, published at Siena in 1608. Only one other copy of this important publication has been located, in the Library of the Liceo at Bologna.

The distinguished pianist, Harold Bauer, is president of the society and, besides Mrs. Longworth, vice presidents include Leopold Stokowski, Carl Engel, Mrs. Howe and Frederick C. Walcott.

Senator, Mrs. Miller In Methodist Building

Friends calling on Senator and Mrs. John E. Miller, of Arkansas, will find them now at the Methodist Building, 110 Maryland avenue. They moved from the Broadmoor day before yesterday.

This week-end their daughter, Miss Mary Louise Miller, will arrive to a brief vacation from her studies at Sullins College, Bristol, Va. Accompanying her will be her roommate, Miss Margaret Etchison, of Tulsa, Okla.

Mrs. Walter Wyatt Luncheon Hostess To 26 at Her Home

Mrs. James H. Hughes, wife of Senator Hughes, of Delaware, her daughter, Mrs. John Patrick Martin, and Mrs. Roy A. Young were the guests in whose honor Mrs. Walter Wyatt entertained at luncheon yesterday.

Mrs. Young is a former resident of Washington. Her husband was chairman of the Federal Reserve Board. Covers at yesterday's party were laid for 26.

Aminta Veeder Becomes Bride

A wedding of wide interest to Washington took place in Baltimore yesterday when Miss Aminta Elizabeth Veeder, of Greenwich, Va., was married to Baldwin Day Spilman, jr., of Warrenton, Va.

The bride, who is the daughter of the late Commodore Ten Eyck DeWitt Veeder and Mrs. Veeder, of Washington, was given in marriage by her brother, Lieut. William Schuetze Veeder, U. S. N. She was attended by her sister, Miss Anne Mackall Veeder.

Mr. Spilman is the son of Mrs. Baldwin Day Spilman and the late Gen. Spilman, of this city. He is a grandson of the late Senator J. N. Camden, of West Virginia.

Mr. and Mrs. Spilman plan to leave later in the month for Florida.

Mexican Ambassador, Wife in Atlantic City

The Mexican Ambassador and Senora Castillo Najera are in Atlantic City, where last evening the former made an address before a convention of the American Association of Directors of Education.

Senora de Castillo Najera has issued invitations for an "at home" on Friday, March 11, from 5 to 7 at the embassy. Her daughter, Senorita Erma Castillo Najero, has cards out for a costume dance on Monday, March 14, at 10:30.

Swanson Makes First Official Debut at Colorful Navy Ball

Sail Loft at Yard Is Manicured to High Polish for Gala Event; Blue and Gold Score Direct Hit at Dansant.

By Elizabeth Ford.

The Sail Loft at the Navy Yard, waxed and manicured to the square inch for the Navy Ball last evening, echoed with four "ruffles" and four "flourishes" and one march as Secretary of the Navy, Claude A. Swanson, made his first official social debut of the season.

Not since Admiral Byrd steamed up the Potomac from the South Pole, has there been quite so much excitement in Admiral George Pettengill's stamping-ground. With no Gen. Malin Craig to upset the perfect evening, the Navy blue and gold braid scored a direct hit at the most elaborate dansant of the year. Even the Sail Loft's elevator shaft, draped for the occasion in pink cardboard, to the American flag made out of electric lights behind the palm-packed band stand . . . well, words to describe it would fail even a wig-wagging expert.

With the Secretary and Mrs. Swanson, were the Norwegian Minister and Mme. Munthe de Morgenstierne; the Minister of South Africa and Mrs. Ralph William Close and their daughter, Mrs. W. S. Mann; the Naval Attache of the German Embassy, Vice Admiral Robert Witthoeft-Emden; Douglas Hall, son of Mrs. Swanson, and Capt. and Mrs. John Beardall, who was in white and green brocade. In a box nearby, sharing the limelight, were the Assistant Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Charles Edison, who was in blue sapphire crepe, trimmed with sequins and cut on simple lines. Their guests included Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Halsey, she in brown net; Lewis Compton and Mrs. Ctompton, who wore black valet; Commander and Mrs. Harold J. Nelson; Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. J. B. Noble, who was in white satin designed with hand-painted flowers, and Douglas Johnson.

'Restaurant' and Har-Bar in Loft

Guests making their grand entrances from the Sail Loft elevator, found themselves stepping right into a "village restaurant" with a buffet and red and white candy-stick awnings. A little farther along was the Har-Bar and the Milk Bar. And even if this wasn't sufficient to put the arrivals in a good humor (supposing anybody could possibly be in a bad one) the jolly impromptu "murals" on the white walls did the trick. Designed by Mrs. J. M. P. Wright, wife of Lieut. Wright, they'll be talked about long after the ball itself is just a collection of souvenir programs and a few pieces of tired confetti.

On every table were large flower pots filled with all kinds of plants, the sale of which, arranged for by Mrs. Earl C. Metz, helped to increase the total funds secured from the event for Navy charities.

The official greeters of the evening were Mrs. Charles Edison, Mrs. George Pettengill, wife of the Commandant of the Navy Yard; the wife of the Chief of Naval Operations, Mrs. William D. Leahy, who was gowned in French blue, and Mrs. Thomas Holcomb, the wife of the Marine Corps Commandant.

Glimpsed on the dance floor were Lieut. Comdr. Harley F. Cope, aide to Admiral Pettengill, and Mrs. Cope, she in white crepe trimmed with red velvet; Capt. and Mrs. W. R. Purnell, who had been among the dinner guests entertained by Commander and Mrs. Greene Dugger before the ball; Miss Caroline Chantry who was in white satin embroidered with gold; Miss Nancy Gatch, who was in a close fitting black gown studded with brilliants and whose corsage was of orchids; Miss Barbara Conrad, who was attired in white net, topped off with a bolero of taffeta and trimmed with a broad sash of royal blue and chartreuse, and Miss Annis Reed in gray lace.

Admiral and Mrs. Conard Present

Others of the Navy set there were Rear Admiral Charles Conard and Mrs. Conard, who was in sapphire marquisette with which she wore a gold corsage and an old gold chain; Admiral and Mrs. W. R. Furlong who wore wine colored satin, with a corsage of flowers in blue and wine shades; Capt. and Mrs. Henry Williams, the latter in white satin with flower designs; Admiral Harold G. Bowen and Mrs. Bowen who was gowned in black taffeta with a full skirt and train; Mrs. Thomas C. Hart who wore gray; Mrs. Charles De Kay in blue, and Admiral and Mrs. C. M. Nimitz.

Still others there were Admiral Adolphus Andrews and Mrs. Andrews, who was in pale green lame. She left immediately after the ball to join her daughter, Miss Frances Andrews, who is in New York. Mrs. W. R. Munroe, wife of Capt. Munroe, wore chartreuse taffeta; while Mrs. Sherwoode A. Taffinder, wife of Capt. Taffinder, was gowned in a black dress fashioned with a cluster of gardenias across the front. Mrs. Charles E. Courtney, wife of Admiral Courtney, was in black crepe trimmed with sequins. Mrs. Charles M. Austin, wife of Capt. Austin, was in a gown of mingled black and gray and yellow and white tones.

Adding a unique spot of color to the scene were the members of the girls' committee, some of whom wore costumes of green skirts and bodices and served as "cigarette girls," while others were milkmaids and wore pink skirts and chartreuse green bodices. Those in this junior group included Miss Christine Gawne, the chairman; Miss Edith Beardall, assistant chairman; Miss Betty McBride, Miss Nancy Brereton, Miss Anne Clarke, Miss Louise Popham, Miss Alice Barry, Miss Alexandrine Rowan, Miss Bliss Schumann, Miss Caroline Chantry, Miss Betty Jane Thurston, Miss Ray Williams, Miss Elizabeth Workman, Miss Barbara Conard, Miss Nancy Gatch and Miss Betsy Rowan.

About The Town

With Dudley Harmon.

DUDLEY HARMON.

SINCE THERE IS seldom much frivolity at a musicale, last evening's party at the Czechoslovak Legation was a rather appropriate way to usher in Lent. In addition to presenting Ruda Firkusny, 26-year-old but already distinguished countryman of the Minister and Mme. Hurban, the affair was the first to have been given at the legation since the Hurbans were driven forth several months ago by an army of termites.

The building is once again in excellent shape, thanks to upward of $35,000 spent to practically do it over. In renovating the designers also took away a lot of rather rococo gold trimming, which is an improvement. The walls are painted white and hung with mirrors and paintings and crystal chandeliers add to the elegance of the scene.

MR. FIRKUSNY made his debut in Washington earlier in the season at Mrs. Townsend's hundredth morning musicale. He is considered something of a prodigy, having composed his first piano piece when he was only 6. He is on a concert tour of the country and recently played at Town Hall in New York. His program last evening included works by Beethoven, Bach, Chopin, Suk and Smetana, the two latter Czechoslovak composers.

The musicale took place in the drawing room, and afterwards the guests gathered in the dining room where was the buffet. Donna Matilde de Suvich, wife of the Italian Ambassador, was glimpsed sitting with Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins, who wore a black velvet gown and a corsage of gardenias.

Representative Edith Nourse Rogers, who is very Czechoslovakia-conscious these days, what with some of her Massachusetts constituents protesting against the importation of shoes from that country, was present last evening. With her black gown trimmed with sequins she wore a brief kolinsky wrap.

Mme. Hurban was in white. Mrs. Jouett Shouse struck a spring-like note in a flowered print in which green predominated. Next door neighbors of the Hurbans, the Austrian Minister and Mme. Prochnik, dropped in, and others from the Diplomatic Corps were the Japanese Ambassador and Mme. Saito, and the Netherlands Minister and Mme. van Haersma de With, in black satin, simply made. Mrs. Harold Tittman, Mrs. Russell Bennet, Mrs. Harold Hinton, Senator and Mrs. Arthur Vandenberg, Representative and Mrs. Sol Bloom, Miss Vera Bloom, Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Exnicios and the Charge d'Affaires of Rumania and Mme. Babes were also present.

A NEW GEORGETOWN house which looks appropriately old is the residence of Mr. and Mrs. L. Metcalfe Walling on Q street in Georgetown. The Wallings came here to live about a year ago after Mr. Walling had served for some time as director of labor of Rhode Island. Both are young and attractive, and their home is charming. The living room has walls painted a pale green, bright chintz curtains and interesting pieces of furniture, including a large desk made from an old piano. The dining room, which is on the floor below, opens directly onto a terraced garden.

Yesterday Mrs. Walling, who is a very pretty blonde, entertained a few of her fellow alumnae from Smith College at a small luncheon. Her guests included Mrs. Horace Peters, Miss Eileen O'Daniel, Miss Helen Blair and Mrs. Walter White—the latter, however, not a Smith-ite. Mrs. White blossomed out in a stunning new spring hat, of natural colored straw, with a small brim, a bunch of flowers fore and a veil drifting aft. She leaves today for a sojourn in Miami.

Miss Blair and her mother will occupy the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jean de Lattre-Seguy beginning next month. The Seguys will be off to Europe for the summer and the Blairs will take over their Volta place residence during their absence.

District D. A. R. Elects Miss Chenoweth Regent

Chapter Also Dedicates Memorial Tablet to Constitution Signers at Cathedral Before Closing Conference.

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

The District of Columbia Daughters of the American Revolution yesterday elected Miss Lillian Chenoweth as regent, dedicated the tablet they have presented to the Washington Cathedral, bearing names of the signers of the Constitution, and closed their three-day conference with a dinner for 700 at the Wardman Park.

The president-general, Mrs. William A. Becker, and other national officers and visiting State regents were honor guests at the dinner at which Mrs. Charles Carroll Haig, retiring regent of the District, presided. The profusion of flowers which marks all D. A. R. conventions added color to last night's banquet. All guests of honor carried one or more bouquets in addition to corsages, and thesewere banked along the front of the long head table.

The newly elected State officers, seated at other tables where there was not room to accommodate their bouquets, either held them in their laps during the dinner or found places for them on the floor

Processional Opens Dinner Program

The honor guests marched to the head table in a processional led by Mrs. William D. Leetch, chairman for correct use of the flag. Behind her came the pages, State officers, past State regents, national officers and visiting State regents. Dr. Clifton P. Clark, president of the Sons of the American Revolution, was the only man at the head table.

Mrs. Beckerr was dressed in a gown of silver satin, with a train, and wore a bouquet of orchids and fresias. Mrs. Henry M. Robert, jr., candidate for president general, who was here from Ball timore, wore the black gown in which she is pictured in the National Historical Magazine of the D. A. R., just issued.

Other national officers included Mrs. William H. Pouch, organizing secretary general, and Mrs. Howard L. Hodgkins, honorary vice president general. The State regents here for the conference were Mrs. Arthur Rowbotham, Virginia; Mrs. Harper Donelson Sheppard, Pennsylvania; Mrs. Walter S. Williams, Delaware; Mrs. John Marshall, South Carolina; Mrs. Henry Clay Chiles, Missouri; Miss Ada Howard Johnson, State regent for France, and Mrs. Volney A. Brundage, vice regent for England.

Mrs. Becker Discusses Problems of Youth

Mrs. Becker, in her address to the D. A. R.s urged a return of the pioneering spirit as "a way to defeat a depression or stop a recession. Rugged character went into the building of the Nation: until we return to pioneering in performance of duty, to being fired with high ideals of service and selflessness, our youth will follow the easy way and take by violence that which has not been earned," she said. She laid responsibility for the modern crime problem at the door of irresponsible parents.

In addition to her talk, the program included vocal selections by Erna Embrey, soprano, and Charlotte LaFond, contralto, accompanied by Jewell Downs, music by the Navy Band Orchestra, and a skit by the State chairman. This was written by Mrs. William B. Sinnott and entitled "Chairmen—Goatmen," with music on the theme of the Volga Boatman. The skit dealt with the fact that the chairmen, although they do much work, have no vote in the D. A. R.

Mrs. George Middleton, chairman of entertainment, was in charge of arrangements for the dinner as well as for the breakfast at which the chairmen entertained at the Mayflower yesterday morning in honor of Mrs. Becker. The State Regents Club, headed by Miss Luella P. Chase, gave a luncheon in her honor also at the A. A. U. W.

At 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, the unveiling ceremonies were held at Washington Cathedral, where names of the 39 signers of the Constitution of the United States are carved on a tablet in the west wall of the Statesmen's Transept. Approximately 400 members of the organization attended the services, which was the first to be held in the west aisle of the transept.

Occupying a space 3½ feet wide and 5 feet deep, the tablet is located directly beneath the stained glass window which shows Moses receiving the Ten Commandments on Mount Sinai. The dedication service followed Evensong conducted by the Rev. Edward S. Dunlap, with Canon Anson Phelps Stokes reading the lesson.

Bishop Freeman Accepts Tablet

After a talk by Mrs. Becker, Mrs. Lee R. Pennington, State historian, and Mrs. Donald M. Earll, vice chairman of the committee on historical research, under whose leadership the fund for the tablet was raised, unveiled it, and Mrs. Haig, as State regent, formally presented it to the Right Rev James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington.

Bishop Freeman, who has been a member of the advisory board of the D. A. R. for the past 15 years, declared that "our security for the president and our assurance for the future depend upon the devotion we disclose to the ideals for which these men stood whose names are engraven on this stone."

State officers, in addition to Miss Chenoweth, who were elected yesterday, were Mrs. Harry Oberholser, vice regent; Dr. Ella R. Fales, recording secretary; Mrs. Arthur C. Houghton, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Joseph Hoffner, treasurer; Mrs. Minnie Ashbrook Tull, assistant treasurer; Mrs. Roger Williams, registrar; Mrs. Tonnis J. Holzberg, historian, and Mrs Edwin Andrus, librarian.

There was a tie for the office of chaplain, for which Mrs. Alexander B. Bell and Mrs. W. A Hartman are candidates. This election will take place at a recessed meeting of the conference, the date for which has not been set. A change in the by-laws relating to the proposed chapter house finances also will come up at this time.

The response will be by Mrs. William Jackson Morton, of Charlottesville, who belonged to Mount Vernon Chapter, when she was a resident of Alexandria, during the 30 years her husband was rector of old Christ Church.

D. C. Camp Fire Girls to Urge Conservation Work Extension

Mrs. Arthur H. Vandenberg, a member of the national board of the Camp Fire Girls, yesterday afternoon was hostess to the local group at a tea at the Sulgrave Club in observance of the twenty-sixth anniversary of the organization. The group decided to urge continuance of work in conservation of natural resources which the 250,000 Camp Fire Girls have been carrying on this year as a national honor project.

A committee to present the proposal to heads of the national organization was formed at the tea. Members include Mrs. Anna Siemon, president of the Guardians Association of Baltimore; Mrs. Paul Ledig, president of the Guardians Association of Bethesda; John Collier, Commissioner of Indian Affairs and chairman of the Camp Fire Girls' conservation project; Mrs. Mary Beard, noted historian, and Miss Ruth Pierpont Stephens, of the national staff.

At the tea a plea for more widespread conservation work was made by Miss Gladys Tantaquidgeon, Mohegan Indian, who shares her forefathers' reverence for nature.

"The Indian guarded our rich heritage of nature," Miss Tantaquidgeon explained, "taking only what he needed for food, shelter and clothing, not wasting our resources or harming the source of supply.

"The Indian believed that plants and animals had souls the same as men and that so long as he obeyed the laws of nature there would always be an abundance of the gifts of the Creator for his use. In this way for many, many years he practised conservation and lived well. Then the white man came and the forests were cut down, the game disappeared and streams became polluted. Now, at last, in the midst of great loss when many of our fields are no longer fertile, comes a ray of light. To the Camp Fire Girls of America, and to others who are undertaking this conservation program, may the gifts of the Creator be restored."

Mr. Collier, as chairman of the conservation project, read messages from Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace and Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes.

When tea was served Miss Tantaquidgeon, in Indian dress, joined hands with Camp Fire Girl Caroline Morel to cut the birthday cake, which bore 26 candles.

Revised Tax Bill Wins Approval Of Committee

Tax

Senators favor complete repeal of the undivided profits tax (still retained in principle in the House bill.):

Senators William H. King, of Utah; Walter F. George, of Georgia; David I. Walsh, of Massachusetts; Josiah W. Bailey, of North Carolina; Bennett C. Clark, of Missouri; Harry F. Byrd, of Virginia; Augustine Lonergan, of Connecticut; Peter G. Gerry, of Rhode Island, and Prentiss M. Brown, of Michigan (Democrats), and Senators Arthur Capper, of Kansas; Arthur H. Vandenberg, of Michigan; John G. Townsend, jr., of Delaware, and James J. Davis, of Pennsylvania (Republicans).

The following eight Senate committee members opposed complete repeal of the undivided profits tax principle, but favor modification—Chairman Harrison, Senate Majority Leader Barkley, Senators Tom Connally, of Texas; Joseph F. Guffey, of Pennsylvania; Robert J. Bulkley, of Ohio; Clyde L. Herring, of Iowa; Edwin C. Johnson, of Colorado (Democrats), and Robert M. La Follette, jr., of Wisconsin (Progressive).

Favors Changes.

Chairman Harrison personally favors the undivided profits tax changes made in the House bill, greatly modifying the levy, but continuing the principle on corporations earning more than $25,000. But Harrison is expected to seek sharply different treatment of the capital gains tax and elimination of the House penalty levy on "closely held" or family corporations.

The Mississippi Senator stands on a statement he made last November, when he favored taking the capital gains tax out of the ordinary income and surtax sections of the present law and placed under a separate classification, with "reasonable" rates substituted.

The House bill provides a more gradual step-down of the percentage account for tax purposes, elimina- of gain or loss to be taken into tion of the highest surtax brackets on individual capital gains, and more liberal deductions of capital losses. Rates would be graduated downward so maximum relief would be received on property held five years, instead of ten. Harrison hopes to see the capital gains rate made lower and greater relief given as to time requirements.

"Done Very Good Job."

But the Finance Committee chairman thinks the House committee has "done a very good job on the undivided profits tax section."

Virtually every member of the committee interviewed stressed the transcendant importance of tax revision, and the probable beneficial psychological effect of promptly enacting a tax bill calculated to encourage business activity.

The 13 committee members favoring complete repeal of the undivided profits tax were unanimous in recognizing the House treatment of this section as an "improvement." Senator George, for example, said he preferred repeal, but would support the House undivided profits section as "next best."

Senator Brown, of Michigan, said he favored repeal, "but failing in that, I would support as great a modification in the tax as we can get." Senator Walsh said he would support any modification that "eliminates the harmful effects of the tax on business," but added: "I have not yet seen or heard of such a proposal."

"I am now, and have always been opposed to the undivided profits tax principle," said Senator Lonergan. "It should have been repealed at the outset of the recession. The time element is all important."

"Most Important."

Senator Bailey said repeal of the levy was one of the most important single things that could be done "to help cure the recession." Similar views were expressed by Senators Clark, Gerry, Byrd and King.

Among the eight who opposed complete repeal, but favored modification, Senator Bulkley said he is "against the undivided profits tax as it now is, but believe there is a middle ground that would be helpful." Senator Connally said he thought "the essential thing is to give the little companies some relief."

Senators Johnson and Herring said they thought the House committee has worked out a satisfactory modification of the undivided profits levy. Senator La Follette, who in the past has opposed completed repeal of the tax, said he stood on prior statements. Majority Leader Barkley said "my first impression is the House committee has done a pretty good job."

An overwhelming majority of those interviewed, including Senator Harrison and others opposed to complete repeal of the undivided profits tax, favored elimination of the House bill provision for penalty taxation of "closely held" corporations earning over $75,000 and failing to make large dividend declarations.

Favor Alternative.

Tightening of provisions of the present law prohibiting "improper" accumulation of surplus for individual tax avoidance, was favored by a majority of these, as an alternative.

"I think we should wipe it out altogether and put back into law another section designed to catch only the tax evaders," said Senator Clark. "It is obviously unjust to punish all alike."

Typical of the Senate committee opposition to the penalty tax provision, were the views of Senator Johnson.

"We must get rid of that section," said the Colorado Senator. "Penalties have no place in this tax bill. Relief is the object."

Committee, which contains 21 members, there are 18 bills, embodying separate and distinct proposals, before them.

"This illustrates the confusion of thought on this most important matter. It seems saner to me that instead of passing some half-baked bill, we really ponder the question for a year. That will hurt no one, and it will mean eventually a bill that will halt abuses and not make for new abuses."

House leaders, when asked if such a joint study would pass the House, answered that it "would pass like a shot."

Demands Definite Start.

Sources close to the Administration asserted yesterday that the President, while willing to leave the form and details of wage-hour legislation entirely to Congress, was anxious to see the principle established of putting a ceiling over hours and a floor under wages.

He will be content, they indicated, with even the merest start toward eventual abolition of "starvation wages and intolerable hours," but he does demand that a definite start be made in the form of a bill at this session.

Labor Committee Busy.

The House Labor Committee, meanwhile, without knowledge of these developments, continued to plow on in an effort to find a bill affecting wages and hours throughout the country on which the House could agree.

Chairman Mary T. Norton (Democrat), New Jersey, appointed a sub-committee of seven members with the allotted task of writing a satisfactory wage-hour bill. Representative Robert Ramspeck (Democrat), Georgia, sub-committee chairman, later said the group would begin work today without "preconceived ideas."

Mrs. Norton asked all House members with wage-hour proposals to communicate with the committee. The members of the seven-man group appeared on the whole to be definitely pessimistic about getting any bill past the House Rules Committee, which stood adamant for months against granting the measure a rule, and thus prevented its reaching the floor until it was blasted out by a petition signed by 218 members of the House.

Ramspeck, in the hope that his group would complete action in two weeks, said public hearings would not be necessary.

Keeping Record Clear.

Observers close to the situation said the President's insistence on passage of some sort of wage-hour bill was not mere stubbornness, and did not mean in itself that he preferred to go over the heads of his veteran Congressional advisers to choose the views of the eager young liberal bloc which seeks reform legislation.

They held, rather, that the President, on the principle that one is never beaten until he admits defeat, is keeping his own record clear on the matter, holding steadfastly to his expressed belief that wage-hour legislation to halt labor evils must come eventually. The burden of blame for not legislating against such evils, if there is such blame, then will fall on Congress, rather than on the White House, it was pointed out.

That the President is consistently pursuing a course of quietly advocating wage-hour legislation in conferences with Congressmen of both chambers has been known for some time, as members who have visited the White House have revealed on several occasions that in the course of talks on other subjects the President would guide the discusion around to the question of wage-hour legislation and would seek their support in secretly pushing the measure.

Reorganization Bill Fight Launched in Senate by Byrd saved, but the cost of Government will increase many millions of dollars.

"I say that because under it we are creating two new permanent departments; we are creating one Cabinet position; and we are providing for six assistants to the President. We are giving to the President and the heads of the departments the power to employ and pay experts and consultants, as many as they desire, and at whatever sums they may desire to pay them, without regard to any other laws passed by Congress."

The Virginian pointed out that actually a two-thirds vote of both Houses would be necessary to block any reorganization executive order issued by the President.

"If Congress disagrees with an executive order," he said, "all it can do is to pass a bill nullifying an order, and then the President may veto the bill. A vote of two-thirds of both Houses is necessary in order to override the veto."

He said this meant "surrendering, for a period not until July 1, 1940," Congressional majority control not merely over administrative duties, but over Government policies and functions as well.

"All Congress can do to reclaim these functions is to pass a bill, and, in the event the President should veto it, to re-enact the bill by a two-thirds vote of both houses. I desire to impress upon the Senate the proposition that any reorganization should be confined to the administrative departments. Reorganization should be considered in the light of producing the most efficient machinery to perform the policies and functions set forth by Congress."

Byrd referred to the internal Administration row over whether the Interior Department's name should be changed to the Department of Conservation. He said the Byrnes bill gives the President power to "prescribe the name and the functions of any agency" affected by an executive order, "to change all the Cabinet positions, and to prescribe the duties, the functions and the powers of the executive heads of departments."

He said the bill prohibits the President from "creating a new agency to exercise any functions which are not expressly authorized; but he is not prohibited from creating a new agency to perform an existing function. He may create as many new agencies as he pleases provided they do not exercise new functions." He said the President could continue expiring emergency agencies through mergers, and could "make transfers of unexpended balances for purposes other than those originally intended by Congress."

Turning again to economy objectives, he compared the 1933 spending figure of $3,500,000,00 with present annual outlays of nearly $8,000,000,000.

He forecast a Government deficit of $1,750,000,000 by July 1 and said that "for 1939 the outlook is even worse, because the recession will affect revenue collections.

Instead of economizing, he said the Administration has created 50 new Government agencies in the last four years and has set up a "bloated bureaucracy."

"The best way to ecnomize is to eliminate extravagance and overlapping," he said. "It is astonishing to hear the President say that only $30,000,000 can be saved by reorganization."

Declaring budget balancing "one of the greatest problems confronting the American people today," Byrd said the Government "will soon enter into the ninth consective year of great deficits."

"We were told by the President a year ago in his budget message that the budget would be in balance in the year 1938," he said. "All one has to do is to refer to the Treasury statement which is upon the desk of each Senator to see that on February 26 the deficit for the present fiscal year is $1,045,000,000, and I predict that by July 1 the deficit will be approximately $1,750,000,000."

quacy of personnel, as to number, qualifications and performance, of the agencies administering the various types of public relief; and to make recommendations as a result of the study to the Congressional committee along any lines in which changes leading to the improvement of service for needy persons is indicated."

To Name Director.

The director of the inquiry is to be chosen by the chairmen of the Senate and House Appropriations Committees. He will be authorized to select his own assistants and to call on the Social Security Board and the Works Progress Administration for aid.

Several of the items eliminated by the Senate sub-committee doubtless will be stanchly defended in the conference with the House as they were written in at the instance of Chairman Collins (Decomrat), of Mississippi.

Two of these, for instance, were the $60,000 appropriation for the preparation of plans for a new main library on the Municipal Center site and a reappropriation of $165,000 for the first public health center to be used in the purchase of the Homeopathic Hospital, which would be converted into a health center and a convalescent home for Gallinger patients.

The Homeopathic purchase was ordered over the objections of the District Commissioners and the health officer.

If the Senate prevails, the health center will be built in accordance with original plans, it is understood, on the site of the Jones Elementary School, First and L streets, and a new school will be built as recommended by the Budget Bureau.

Will Cost $100,000.

The main library designation was changed to a branch library after a point of order was raised in the House that the project had not been authorized.

Restoration of appropriations for the National Training School for Girls and the Children's Receiving Home will cost the District more than $100,000. Collins had proposed that the children be turned over to the Woman's Bureau of the police department and that the girls be sent to the District Training School for Boys at Blue Plains.

The return of jurisdiction over school playgrounds to the playground department will require only a shift in appropriations, but no increase in cost. The House had turned them over to the Community Center for year-round operation.

Health department and school estimates were said to have been restored generally to Budget Bureau estimates, although details will not be available until the bill is reported.

Baruch's Views Called Blow to Administration

it has appeared to be, there is no hope of re-employment and substantial recovery.

"I say it with regret, but I would be less than candid if I failed to express my opinion that unemployment is now traceable more directly to Government policy than to anything that business could or should do and that if those policies are not changed, neither business nor Government can ever solve this most terrible of all our problems."

Other Senators on the committee told reporters later that the very fact that Hatch and Byrnes endeavored to nullify the effect of Baruch's testimony of Monday was evidence of its weight. A number of Senators who participated in the fight last year against the President's court reorganization bill hailed Baruch's pointed testimony as a powerful aid in their efforts to block reform legislation at this session.

Urges "Natural Economy."

Baruch yesterday talked on two subjects—agriculture and monopoly. On both he urged a return to natural economic laws. Of agriculture, he said:

"We cannot go along with a lopsided economy—half-boom, half-bust.

"We started the chain of events that upset that balance at our very beginning when we adopted a system of protective tariffs that was deliberately intended to subsidize our industry at the expense of our agriculture.

"We interfered with natural economic laws when we started this disparity. There are only two possible solutions. One is to knock down the old artificiality of the tariff. The other is to build up a new artificiality to offset it.

"Only the latter alternative is possible.

Asks "Straight Subsidy."

". . . The best, simplest, fairest and most logical way to do this (boost farm income) is by a straight subsidy on the domestic consumption of farm products, leaving marketing and production free.

"In the presence of great gluts or surplus creating an exaggerated low price for farm or other products, I would be willing to try loans on a scaled-down value to tide over an emergency, always keeping the amount below the cost of reproduction.

"As such a period approaches, some agency should either commence to buy commodities or lend money on them. This action would have a tendency to steady the entire structure and prevent the mass madness of panicky deflation."

He suggested this course only for raw materials.

Speaking of the new farm bill, he questioned "its more ambitious attempts at all times to control price by controlling marketing and production."

Minority Report on Tax Bill

Following are excerpts from the minority report of Ways and Means Committee Republicans filed last night in opposition to the Administration tax bill.

"We shall make no attempt to set forth our position with reference to each and every provision, since the bill is exceedingly long and involves many changes of existing law.

"However, by reason of certain outstanding undesirable features, we cannot give the bill our support. These are:

"1. The retention of the vicious and indefensible principle of the undistributed profits tax, which we have at all times vigorously opposed.

"2. The imposition of an unwarranted and discriminatory penalty tax on closely held or family corporate business organizations.

"3. The absence of such a limitation on the taxation of capital gains as would increase the revenue from this source by encouraging, rather than preventing, capital transactions and the investment of new funds in productive enterprise

"We favor, and the country demands, the outright, unconditional repeal of the undistributed profits tax. There can be no possible justification for the retention of this discredited and exceedingly destructive form of taxation in any degree whatsoever.

"When the undistributed profits tax was proposed in 1936, we Republican members of the committee filed a dissenting report strongly opposing its enactment . . .

"Our warning—accurately prophetic—was completely ignored. Had it been heeded, the country would not today be faced with a depression of the deepest magnitude—a Franklin D. Roosevelt depression . . .

"The devastating results of the operation of the undistributed profits tax during the past two years have furnished an unanswerable argument in support of our demand for its unconditional repeal. . . .

"We deny that the pending bill in any way reduces the total tax burden on corporations either large or small. The fact is that the elimination of the undistributed profits tax feature with respect to small corporations, and the reduction of the amount of undistributed profits tax on larger corporations is completely offset by the sharp increase in the normal tax rates applicable to all corporations. . . .

"The bill, if adopted, would continue to tax at a higher rate the business that is least able to pay; to discriminate among competitors by taxing them at different rates on the same earnings; and to put a penalty on the accumulation of "rainy day" reserves, which in effect are insurance policies which enable business to weather economic adversity while maintaining in some degree at least employment and wages.

"In our view, there can be no compromise where fundamental principles are concerned. The undistributed profits tax is punitive in character and repressive in effect, and should be completely eliminated from our tax system. . . .

"Another feature of the bill to which we object most strenuously is the proposed penalty tax, imposed in addition to all other taxes, on the undistributed earnings of business enterprises owned by families or a few individuals.

"We are unalterably opposed to this provision, not only because it is an extension of the vicious principle of the undistributed profits tax, to which we have already referred, but because it imposes an arbitrary, unwarranted, discriminatory, and oppressive burden on legitimate, labor-employing business enterprises. . . .

"The truth is that the proposed penalty tax is in the bill simply because of the vindictive attitude of the Treasury Department at having failed to prove an unreasonable retention in two cases prosecuted in the courts under the present section 102.

"There is a widespread feeling, also, that another purpose of the proposed penalty tax is to provide the Administration with a means of retaliation against certain corporations controlled by a few individuals who differ politically with the Administration and who have resisted certain New Deal policies with which they do not agree. If this be so, and we have no reason for doubting it, the proposed tax takes on the character of a political weapon for 'purging' the business structure of the Nation of some of the outstanding opponents of the Administration. . . .

"That the high rates of tax applicable to capital gains have been a major factor in the present depression can not be denied. They have blocked the turnover of capital assets and discouraged the investment of all private funds in expansions and new enterprises which would have afforded employment for millions of idle men and women.

"While the majority recognize the blighting effect which the capital gains tax has had upon business, they fail to provide adequate remedy. Their proposal to limit the tax to 40 per cent of the capital gain taken into account will be of little, if any, value in stimulating capital transactions, and will, therefore, have little, if any, effect in increasing the revenue from this source of income.

"We of the Republican minority advocate a return to the 12½ per cent limit on capital gains which was in effect from 1921 to 1934, when the present scheme, which the bill continues, was put into effect.

"Under our suggestion, taxpayers would have the option of paying the rates provided under the bill or of segregating their entire capital gains from other income and paying a flat tax of 12½ per cent thereon. . . .

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

Washington, March 2.

Most of Washington's great and near-great are movie fans; but they'd rather see the pictures at Mrs. Evalyn (Hope Diamond) McLean's great mansion, Friendship, where her butler serves champagne with the cinema . . . She's an ace hostess in a most hospitable town.

Elissa Landi

On his third Martini at the colossal McNutt-for-President shindig, a young New Dealer coined (or second-handed) a name which may figure in the 1940 campaign—McBayonutt. (McNutt was a great mobilizer of militia.)

"As Governor," he explained, "he was an expert in martial law."

Aside from the incidental political poison which flowed around the refreshment tables, McNutt made a favorable impression . . . People stood and gawked at his silver hair and mahogany tan . . .

A few remarked on his resemblance to Warren Harding in his 40's.

Among some of the "nice people" in the Capital there's a definite Fascist trend. Their motto is "Nothing succeeds like success," and since Hitler and Mussolini have won their latest triumphs, they wonder if fascism couldn't be refined and canned under a Yankee label. *

Not to mention many smaller pictures of Elissa Landi, to whom he will be nearer as Governor of California . . . Washington wonders whether Elissa will leave her magic tree, on which grow lemons, oranges, grapefruit, kumquats and tangerines, to become California's first lady . . . In an acidulous era, O'Connor is singular that he leaves his comptrollership of currency with plaudits and good will.

Virginia Kills Tightening of Milk Control

Moffett-Witten Measure Voted Down 16-21 in Senate.

Upper House Reports Out Pay Increase for Court Members.

Richmond, March 1.—The Moffett-Witten bill for tightening State milk control laws met sudden death in today's session of the Virginia Senate after it was subjected to a spirited attack.

The bill carrying out recommendations of the Department of Agriculture and State milk commission, lost, 16 to 21. The measure was vigourously denounced by Senators Charles E. Burks, of Lynchburg; Lloyd M. Robinette, of Lee, and J. Belmont Woodson, of Nelson.

Meanwhile, the Senate finance committee acted favorably today on bills calling for a complete revision of the retirement law for judges and increasing the pay of members of the supreme court, circuit and corporation judges and members of the State corporation commission.

The series of measures, recommended by the Advisory Legislative Council, had rested in the committee since early in the session, awaiting their turn behind the old-age relief bill, which was passed in slightly different forms by the Senate and House simultaneously last week.

Boschen Bill Passes.

The House of Delegates passed the Boschen bill, prohibiting the application of the "mob" or "antilynch" law to cases of strikers guilty of simple assault, and otherwise amending present law to place labor [illegible] on the same footing as other [illegible] who may be charged with simple or malicious assault or murder, advanced two other controversial bills in position for passage tomorrow and adjourned an hour ahead of the upper house.

The delegates also heard Capt. Richard L. Reiss, British authority on housing, discuss England's experiences with public housing projects, providing 1,500,000 housing units within the past 18 years.

The judges' retirement bills reported by the Senate finance committee would permit a circuit or corporation judge to leave the bench at the age of 70 and draw three-fourths pay if he had served as long as 15 years. Members of the supreme court and of the corporation commission could retire at the same age if they had a 10-year service record.

Salary Boosts Listed.

The bills would boost the salaries of the trial judges from $4,500 to $6,000 a year, of the chief justice of the supreme court from $7,900 to $9,500, of associate justices of the supreme court from $7,500 to $9,000, and of members of the corporation commission from $7,000 for the associate commissioners and $7,200 for the chairman to $8,500.

Senator Robinetta told the Senate during an hour's debate on the Moffett-Witten bill that the measure would impose a hardship on the two or three cow farmers and tighten a rope about their necks to the advantage of the large producer.

Senator Burks sought to insert an amendment before the bill was killed to eliminate a section providing for a "A" grade of milk, but his proposal was rejected. The Senate, however, acepted Senator A. L. Bivins' amendment striking out a section requiring city milk ordinances to be approved by the agriculture department.

The regulations proposed in the bill, Senator Woodson argued, should be under the health department instead of the department of agriculture, but Senator W. Stuart Moffett, of Staunton, one of the patrons, said a former health commissioner asked that the work be removed from his jurisdiction.

Burks' chief objection to the bill, he said, was that it struck at the small producer.

G. W. U. May Form Rose Growers Class

A course for rose growers may be established at the George Washington University, President Cloyd H. Marvin said last night.

Mavin told over 150 delegates at the first meeting of a three day rose growers institute that their meeting might be expanded into a short course, given annually by the university to assist growth of garden club activities.

Robert Pyle, president of the Conard-Pyle Co. of West Grove, Pa., urged development of a national rosarium in Washington. Mrs. E. H. Klaber discussed plans for rose gardens. Members of the discussion panel were Mayor R. L. Ruffner of Alexandria, A. H. Hanson and J. W. Staalman. B. Y. Morrison, of the Department of Agriculture, presided.

Experts Extol Character as Bar to Crime

Post Staff Photos.

Leaders of the Protestant, Jewish and Catholic faiths met last night in a discussion at the Crime Clinic. At the top is the Rev. Robert J. White, of Catholic University; center is the Rabbi Abram Simon, and, lower, is Dr. Ralph W. Sockman, pastor of Christ Church, New York.

Building of character that is "crime resistant," was the keynote of a discussion of "Religion and Crime" at Friends Meeting House last night by Protestant, Catholic and Jewish speakers in the eighteenth Crime Clinic of the Institute of Criminal Science.

"Some of the best minds our schools have produced are now leading criminals and you may rest assured it is not only the illiterate who make up our increasing list of gangsters," the Rev. Ralph W. Sockman, pastor of Christ Church, New York, declared.

Attacking forms of gambling made legal by law, the Rev. Mr. Sockman asserted, "we are inclined too much toward hating the criminal, but not hating the crime."

"Religion today is the most powerful form of creating a character of crime resistance we have," he said, "the subtility of temptation has overtaken the sensativeness of conscience."

Heredity, glandular theories, and other "cure all" solutions to the crime problem were attacked by the Rev. Robert J. White, dean of the law school of Catholic University.

"The Catholic Church," the Rev. Mr. White declared, "stands as a champion of a positive unchanging moral law and denies the many theories based upon ridiculous and far-fetched causes of crime."

Newspaper tabloids and motion pictures "playing up lewd sex scenes," were blamed by the Rev. Mr. White as important factors in aiding in the development of crime.

Representing the Jewish faith, Rabbi Abram Simon, of the Washington Hebrew Congregation, urged that "in our free country, where religious sects are alowed to be separated, let us be sure that religion is not separated from democracy."

Hazen Urges $10,000,000 Slum Project

Alley Dwelling Authority to Confer With D. C. Official Today.

Money Is Sought From Half Billion Provided in Wagner Act.

Members of the District Alley Dwelling Authority will confer today with Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen to formulate plans for a $10,000,000 campaign for slum clearances here.

The money would be sought from the $500,000,000 allotment under the Wagner act, Hazen said.

"President Roosevelt has already allotted $1,000,000 of the money to the local authority, and we are grateful for this sum," he declared.

Would Leave Alleys.

Commissioner Hazen pointed out that the $1,000,000 was "all right as a starter," but estimated that it would take at least $9,000,000 more to "clean-up the slums in the District."

Another action which will be discussed concerns a proposed amendment to the act which would permit the Alley Dwelling Authority to use the money for other types of slum clearances.

"An example of this would be to build houses away from the alleys for the families that have been dwelling in the alleys all their lives," Hazen stated. "Sometimes it is advisable to move the entire little community to a better locality."

Under the provisions of the act it has been suggested that the District contribute 10 per cent of the amount. Hazen declared that he hoped the District would not have to provide this amount because of the poor financial situation generally.

Favors Local Plan.

At the same time Hazen declared that he was favorable to the local dwelling set-up as opposed to the United States Housing Authority in the administration of the low-housing projects.

"Under our plan the projects are self-supporting whereas under the Housing Authority the Government stands to put out all the money without a cent in return," Hazen said.

The local dwelling authority provides for rents to be paid from the tenants.

Civil Service Body Opposes Changes

The United States Civil Service Employes yesterday petitioned the President and Congress to protect the merit system in the Federal service by avoiding new experiments and building on the foundations already laid.

"You can lay aside the experience of the years in order to experiment with new forms of administration of the civil service. This we believe would be undesirable," the petition stated. "You can build upon the foundations laid in the past, and correct the existing abuses of administration, so easily discerned in the present practices. This we favor."

"The foundations are sound. The principles are right," the petition added, asking the President and Congress to "decline to weaken the whole structure by experimenting with an untried theory." The petition did not say that its reference is to the reorganization proposal which would establish a single Civil Service administrator. The U. C. S. E. is headed by E. Claude Babcock; its membership is composed of Federal workers who entered the service through merit procedure.

1,200 Persons Acclaim Gen Hines at Banquet Feting 15th Year as Veterans' Administrator

Slightly solemn-faced, Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines, celebrating his fifteenth anniversary as administrator of veterans' affairs in the company of 1,200 persons last night at the Mayflower, heard encomiums heaped upon his head and found himself shunted into the situation of High Commissioner McNutt. He was nominated for the Presidency by Senator King, of Utah.

Becoming very solemn-faced at all the fuss made over him, Gen. Hines emphatically declined the nomination, but not before he had attributed his success in office to the people who work for him and looked increasingly astonished at the crowd and the praise.

First off, he was saluted by the President, who conveyed—by letter—felicitations and the sentiment: "The duties which he has discharged through that long and, at times, critical period have been of vital importance alike to the veterans and to the public and have required a large measure of integrity and tact and discretion."

Plaudits Unstinted.

Other tributes were:

Representative Griswold (Indiana): "The hat you wore as Private Hines, of Utah, hasn't grown a bit larger" . . . Senator McCarran (Nevada): "You have been a great soldier and a great administrator" . . . Representative Woodrum (Virginia): "As an effective, efficient and devoted public servant you have no peer in America" . . . Representative Ramspeck (Georgia): "I have never heard one word of criticism of your administration. The Nation is proud of a man who has performed his work so effectively and possesses such character" . . . Senator Harrison (Mississippi): "In the days of Coolidge, Hoover and Roosevelt you weathered 'em; we're all for you because youmad egood" . . .

Representative Edith Nourse Rogers (Massachusetts): "No breath of scandal has ever touched Gen. Hines. Your 15 years of work have proved a wonderful dedication of life." Similar expressions came from Representative John Lesinski (Michigan), Luther Steward, president, National Federation of Federal Employes, whose Veterans' Administration local sponsored the banquet; Col. George E. Ijams, assistant administrator of veterans' affairs; Representative Allard E. Gasque (South Carolina), and Gives Helpers Credit.

Senator King projected the administrator's possibilities: "I know of very few who would discharge such duties with more integrity, fidelity and devotion to the Democratic ideals and ideas than Gen. Hines." The nomination followed a flurry of talk about McNutt's suggested candidacy, talk not done very seriously. Hines didn't refer to it until after his formally prepared speech had been delivered, then he said: "I decline the nomination."

"I wish to say at once that such success as we may have had in paying the Nation's debt to our defenders and their dependents has been the result of teamwork on the part of many thousands of people over the years, rather than the work of any one man." To members of Congress he gave credit "for hammering out the form which the various legislative measures have had to take, in order to be workable and practical in their application."

"Our system of Veterans' relief has been an effort to attain an ideal—but much of our course in pursuit of this has been necessarily explored by means of trial and error," he stated.

Health Permit Office in Court Building Urged

D. C. Agency, Homeless for Two Months, Locates Quarters.

The permit office of the health department, presently located at Eighth and I streets northwest, and for the past two months looking for a place to move, may find quarters in the old Police Court Building, it was disclosed yesterday.

Located in a privately-owned building, the permit office for many years enjoyed free rent. The health department was notified about the first of the year to pay rent or find new quarters, according to District Building officials.

Available space was sought high and low throughout the District holdings but not even a basement was found. The permit office at one time was housed in the District Building basement.

Now that the new Police Court Building has been completed and will be ready for use in two weeks, the first floor of the old building was suggested as the solution to the permit office problem.

The project would require renovations, it was pointed out, since the first floor of the old building contains the heating plant for the building and other mechanical equipment. The second and third floors of the old building will be made into a detention house for female prisoners, under the plan.

In the meantime Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen was hopeful that the United States District Court justices would agree on his plan to place all criminal proceedings in the new Police Court Building.

The plan would necessitate assigning two justices from the United States District Court. A conference has been scheduled for Saturday.

Citizens Ask Inquiry on Wire Merger

Columbia Heights Move Based on Layoffs by Two Firms.

Two Groups Oppose Bill for One-Cent Tax on Fuel Oil.

Possibility of a merger between the Western Union and Postal Telegraph companies was scored last night in a resolution of the Columbia Heights Citizens Association, asking that the Federal Communications Commission investigate the two firms.

W. I. Swanton, secretary of the group, attributed the association's action to recent layoffs by the two firms.

Washington officials of both firms denied last night that any merger was near. They attributed recent layoffs to the business recession.

An employe of the Postal Telegraph Co. admitted that the merger was "in the air."

"We have all been trying here to find out whether the merger is going through. The company says there is no merger." He pointed out that telegraph offices in various sections of the country had been closed, apparently by agreement, when the branches overlapped.

Following action on the merger possibility, the citizens association adopted a resolution asking 100 additional police for the District as recommended by Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police. It also directed tis committee on crime to continue investigation of crime and its social causes.

Lieut. Horace W. Lineburg said that statistics did not show any increase of crime in the area of Columbia Heights.

favor of a 60-40 local budget division between the District and Federal governments rather than the present lump sum grant. They opposed passage of a tax of 1 cent a gallon on fuel oil.

The Southeast Washington Citizens Association, meeting at Fifth Precinct Police Station last night, adopted a resolution opposing a proposed 1-cent tax on fuel oil and asked enforcement of District laws prohibiting use of air rifles and air pistols.

The association also asked that traffic lights be installed in the southeastern section at Fifth street and Pennsylvania avenue, Seventh and Pennsylvania, Eighth and Pennsylvania and Eleventh and M streets. A committee on suffrage was appointed, including William Mayo, Orrin Davey and John Lane.

6900 Salary Checks Issued For 10 Films

Twentieth Century-Fox Is Operating With Biggest Pay Roll in History.

In compliance with President Roosevelt's request for big business to step up employment, Darryl F. Zanuck, Twentieth Century-Fox production chief, has postponed his vacation and has overhauled the entire production program to push his big cast pictures before the cameras.

Setting a new high for activity in all Hollywood, the studio has ten big films in production. Counting an army of 300 uniformed men for World War scenes in Irving Berlin's "Alexander's Ragtime Band," the studio has 1,900 players at work, also 5,000 technicians and other employes also are at work. It costs a fortune and 6,900 checks to pay them off.

Before Zanuck reworked his production schedule, Hollywood activity was at the lowest ebb for this season in more than three years.

In addition, the studio has placed in production Shirley Temple's starring picture, "Little Miss Broadway," Victor McLaglen-Brian Donlevy's costarring film, "Battle of Broadway," and the Ritz Brothers' musical comedy, "Kentucky Moonshine."

Other films working are Robert Louis Stevenson's "Kidnapped," with Warner Baxter, Freddie Bartholomew and Arleen Whelan; "Four Men and a Prayer," with Loretta Young, David Niven, Reginald Denny, Alan Hale and Richard Greene; "Josette," costarring Simone Simon and Don Ameche; "Mr. Moto's Gamble," with Peter Lorre; "Island in the Sky," with Gloria Stuart and Michael Whalen, and the Jones Family in "A Trip to Paris," with Jed Prouty, Spring Byington and others.

The various film companies stagger the luncheon hour so the Cafe de Paris can accommodate the crowds. The cafe can feed only 500 persons at a time.

Plans for other big productions are being pushed in order to sustain the work program. Among the stories in preparation are "Life of George Sand," starring Annabella; "Hudson's Bay Company," "Rise of Disraeli," with Tyrone Power, and Sonja Henie's next starring picture.

Poll Shows Crosby Top Song Plugger

Bing Crosby is the king of the song pluggers, a check of several music publishing houses recently showed.

And rating not far behind him is the brunette siren from the South, Dorothy Lamour.

The music houses estimate that when Crosby sings a song on the air, at least 10,000 copies of that song will be sold the following day. Miss Lamour's first test, it was revealed, was made on her song in "The Big Broadcast of 1938." She sang the song "You Took the Words Right Out of My Heart," recently on her Sunday radio program and the following day more thatn 8,000 copies were sold.

Four orchestras and six singers were named at the 10 top song pluggers. In addition to Crosby and Miss Lamour, the pluggers were Guy Lombardo, Wayne King, Rudy Vallee, Eddie Duchin, Al Jolson, Kate Smith, Kenny Baker and Lanny Ross.

With the exception of Crosby, who not so long ago recorded songs from "Doctor Rhythm" for Decca, none of the music houses would officially rate the pluggers, but admitted that Miss Lamour would rank at least third.

William Quitting Gadget Inventing

Wonders of the world will no longer be conceived and developed in the small workshop on Warren William's San Fernando Valley ranch.

"I've made 138 inventions, and that's all I'm going to invent for posterity," smilingly said the film colony's foremost inventor, as he packed away his last train child, between scenes of "Wooden Wedding." "Now, I'm going to have some fun."

By that William means riding horseback, playing tennis, golf and any other athletic games in his long repertory of sports.

"Not that I don't enjoy inventing, and making gadgets for the house," the actor explained, "but it has gotten so I don't do anything else.

"In the past two yeras, my wife and I haven't been out more than five evenings and we never go on any week-end trips. When I'm not working on a picture, I'm in my shop experimenting, but from now on it's going to be different."

Star's Bugle Call Hint for Luncheon

The organ on the set of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Wooden Wedding" has been the basis for a whole series of gags since it was first installed. Robert Montgomery, required to play a one-finger melody on it for one sequence of the picture, took three lessons to master it. "Three more lessons, boys," he assured the crew, "and I'll really be able to play this thing." The hundred and twenty-five-odd stops bothered him not in the least.

At home he learned to pick out various bugle calls on the piano. Returning to the set, he played the mess call for the benefit of Director Richard Thorpe, who was so immersed in the script at noon that he didn't realize this was a gentle hint to knock off for lunch.

'Young Eddy' Is Expert Marksman

Bill Cody, Jr., son of the former Western and circus star, is quite a Western star in his own right.

Though just 12, young Cody, currently playing the juvenile Nelson Eddy in the prologue sequence of "The Girl of the Golden West," has won many cups for his marksmanship, handling a lariat, and bronco-busting.

Nelson B. Bell About The Showshops

'Romance in the Dark' Is Handsome Musical Item; Voices of Swarthout and Boles Perfectly Blended

John Barrymore Also Contributes One of His Best Comedy Performances to Picture of Operatic Stage; Mr. Greneker Stops by From the Shubert New York Offices to Boost Cole Porter Musical; Jack Buchanan Stands Pat; What of "Between the Devil?"

PERHAPS it is because I am so personally fond of him as one of the most likable gentlemen in Hollywood. It may be because an aunt of his and my revered maternal ancestor were classmates at the old Wesley College in Cincinnati. Whatever it was, the handsome fellow "clicked" with me when Paramount's new production of "Romance In The Dark" was screened for a minority of the drama desks in the private projection room of the Twentieth Century-Fox Film Exchange yesterday afternoon.

BELL.

What I mean to say is that John Boles seems to these eyes to be improving constantly as an actor. There never was a great deal of room for improvement in his singing, although he has confided more than once that he was just beginning to learn how to sing, under the tutelage of the late Jean De Reske, when he entered pictures with Gloria Swanson in "The Loves of Sonya," the initial attraction at the Roxy Theater, when the Roxy was the biggest and most ornate playhouse in the world. Roxy paid an opening week's rental of $50,000 for "The Loves of Sonya," but that is beside the point.

The point is that John Boles can sing—and does, beautifully, in "Romance In The Dark." Once again he is "teamed" with Gladys Swarthout, one of the cinema's better thrushes. Miss Swarthout, as you may have heard, has a voice—a voice ideally modulated to some of the most popular and enduring of the operatic arias. So has Boles. Never, I think, have I heard on the screen, or elsewhere, two such perfectly blended voices as these two.

There are many periods of fine music in "Romance In The Dark"—fine, but not too fine to escape the appreciation of tastes not completely attuned to the more complicated harmonies of a form of musical expression that seems to exercise a peculiar terror for many auditors for no other reason than the presence of the word "operatic" in their description.

The fable unfolded in "Romance In The Dark" is not too formidable in its manipulation of the usual elements of drama that pertain to the furtherance of a budding career in song. There are times when the thing falls pretty flat, due more to the frailty of the lines written for the pivotal characters than to any shortcoming of the tale as a possible reflection of what might really happen in the continental opera houses. But always when the dialogue begins to wobble there is a burst of song to distract attention from the tottering dramatic structure. This is well, for, as I have said, two voices never produced more mellow or entrancing melody than Miss Swarthout's and Mr. Boles'. There is a mellifluous amalgamation of tone and timbre here that seldom has been approximated on any sound track. Then there is the matter of John Barrymore. Boy, bring up another paragraph.

Those who are able to hark back to the days when the youngest of the Barrymores was featured with the late Tom Wise in a series of flippant comedies, must remember that John Barrymore made his entrance into the theater as a light comedian. In the process of pursuing a career commensurate with the reputation of one of the most distinguished families in the American theater, John, in time, toyed with the classics. His toyings were productive of some of the most memorable performances ever written into the annals of the playhouse in this country. I remember having denominated his "Peter Ibbetson" as a precursor to "Hamlet"—a prophecy which, by some fortunate turn of circumstances, came true. More recently he has been reverting to type—and a very fine type it is for those who enjoy frivolity. In "Romance In The Dark" Barrymore cannot be said to be as excessively ludicrous as he was in "True Confession"—especially in that dinky little row-boat when he chanted the whimsical refrain, "Oh, for the life of a buccaneer"—but he is funny enough for all practical purposes.

So at this juncture who should drop by the desk but that estimable practitioner of the theater, Claude P. Greneker, one of the right hands of the Messrs. Shubert in New York.

Mr. Greneker comes to town in the interest of the new Cole Porter musical, "You Never Know," which will be seen on the stage of the National Theater in the not too distant future, with Clifton Webb, Lupe Velez, Libby Holman and Toby Wing in the stellar roles. This will not be a "first time on any stage," but it will be close enough.

Mr. Greneker, by the way, seems to devote his promotional activities largely to the Shubert musical productions, his last visit here having been at the time of the "command performance" of "Between the Devil," first of the observances in the merry round of President's birthday celebrations. If "You Never Know" is as clever an evening of entertainment as "Between the Devil," the National should be sold out for the entire engagement.

The informed Mr. Greneker makes known one disturbing fact with regard to the New York future of "Between the Devil." For some inexplicable reason, Jack Buchanan, costarred in the piece with Evelyn Laye and Adele Dixon, was signed only for a 12-week season in this country. Being a young man of wide theater and motion picture holdings in his native England, Mr. Buchanan has no mind to overstay the time limit of his original agreement on this side. That is too bad, for Mr. Buchanan is a facile and thoroughly engaging comedian of a type too seldom seen on the American stage these days. Miss Laye, in passing, who was as gracious as she always is when here with "Between the Devil," in private life, is the wife of Frank Lawton, appearing this week in the role of the poet, Shelley, in Alfred de Liagre's production of "I Am My Youth," at the National. Extremely nice people to know.

And, so Mr. Greneker further tells me, Libby Holman, returning to the musical comedy stage after a long absence, is in her "best form" in "You Never Know." If that throaty voice of hers is as good as it was back in the old days when she played the Palace with a Publix stage unit, before ever having crashed Broadway, that should be an additional reason why the piece should sell out.

Cole Porter, just to do a little more native-son bragging, is a fellow Hoosier, who hails from the town of Peru, Ind. That is where the Wallace-Hagenback Circus used to winter, unless I have my memory on crooked. I wonder if Mr. Porter could have derived some of his earlier inspirations as one of the country's most tuneful composers, from his back-porch listening to the band tooting its lively melodies in rehearsal under the "big tops?"

Mr. Porter, unfortunately, at the moment is confined to his apartment—or maybe it is a hospital—with one or two fractured legs. It is hoped he will be out in time to attend the Washington opening of his latest contribution to the gayety of nations and National Capitals.

In Hollywood

With HEDDA HOPPER

Hollywood, Calif., March 1.—While watching the preview of "Dangerous to Know," featuring Ahn May Wong, Akim Tamiroff and Gail Patrick, I remembered what fun I had while we were making it, and thought you, too, might enjoy a peep behind the scenes and a day in the studio.

HEDDA HOPPER.

The first scene taken was between Miss Wong and Donald Brian of "The Merry Widow" fame. As I watched that rather tired man playing a scene, there flashed before me a vision of Clark Gable, Gary Cooper and Bob Taylor. You won't believe it, but Donald Brian had the same appeal. Women lost their minds over him. Mobbed him at stage doors, tore buttons off his clothes, and one of the most beautiful women in America—social background and pots of money—divorced her husband and married him.

And there, waiting to do a tiny bit, was the Earl of Warwick. And I saw behind him Warwick Castle and his grandfather, known as the kingmaker of England. And he was worried over whether Paramount would lift that paper, called an option. They did. Since then he's been to England, gotten a divorce, and is back ready and eager to make good in the movies.

On that set I met a new type of blonde. Big brown eyes and just turned 20. Her name is Evelyn Keyes. Lives at the Studio Club here, a read home for little money. Did her first small part in "The Buccaneers." Cecil DeMille, with half a dozen others, wanted her to go to New Orleans for the opening of that picture. The studio made her some beautiful costumes.

And when she landed in New Orleans she came down with a bad case of measles. Her personal appearance was made in her bedroom! And the walls of that room hadn't been trained to applaud, neither had her nurse and doctor, the only two people she saw while she was there.

Also on the set of "Dangerous to Know" was George Melford, one of our biggest directors in the old days. A sad, happy, quiet man. His once elaborate parties were front page news. He's very grateful that the young director remember him and give him work.

The assistant director was constantly paging Miss Wong, who disappeared between each take and was busy as a bird dog, with interviews, telephone calls and decorators. She was doing over her apartment. An amazing girl, Anna. I first met her when she was playing in "The Thief of Bagdad. She's now getting back into her stride again. I admired her for going to China and learning her own language. She wrote interesting articles for the New York Tribune. She's sorry she didn't keep them up.

While lunching with her at Warner Brothers', where she's now doing "When Were You Born," who should walk into the Green Room but the Earl of Warwick and Eddie Goulding, who sat down with us. Whoever wrote "East is East and West is West and never the twain shall meet," couldn't have known about the motion picture business.

You'll hate Tamiroff in "Dangerous to Know" as much as you loved him in "The Buccaneers." He's suave, polished and smooth as black molasses. I liked him last week, too, when he and Gregory Ratoff sloshed about in the rain for 15 minutes at the University of California until they found the hall where Marian Anderson, famous colored singer, was singing spirituals.

Rosalind Russell's writing a book titled "And So I Came to Hollywood," and she says every word of it's true. If and when this comes out, I predict she'll be in line for a long vacation.

Rosemary Lane, last week worked 56 hours on the set of "Golddiggers," went on three radio programs, recorded three songs, made two personal appearances and dedicated a new cafe. I'd call that a vacation.

Wonder if it's true that Lily Pons was highly insulted when invited to sing for "Snow White?" I'd be proud to be "Snow White's" anything.

Great excitement on the "Goodbye Broadway" set persuading an enraged woman, with her young daughter in tow, who insisted the child had been engaged as Betty Lou's stand-in. Ray McCarey, the director, patiently explained that Betty Lou and Tommy Riggs were one. She was just as positive, having heard them on Rudy Valee's radio hour, that it wasn't true. They introduced her to Tommy.

Then the director lost his temper. Alice Brady and Charlie Winninger let out whoops of joy—they had put over another gag!

Rudy Knows Rule For Any Chorine

Whether the show girls should wear white boleros and black skirts or black boleros and white skirts in the finale number of "Golddiggers in Paris," has been the problem perplexing Director Busby Berkeley and Cameraman George Barnes.

Samples were made up both ways and Barnes began to test them. The costumes are scanty, in fact very scanty. Rudy Vallee dropped in during the tests and Berkeley explained his problem. Rudy took one look at the girls and whistled.

"Why worry about it?" he said. "If the audience sees the costume, the girl's a flop!"

Loyalty.

Bette Davis prefers Hollywood for shopping, above any other city, declaring the styles are more advanced there.

Good Points.

Jane Bryan, currently appearing in "A Slight Case of Murder," fences daily to keep fit.

Katharine Hepburn: Andrea Leeds, who first attracted attention when she appeared with you in a bit-role in "Stage Door," has been signed by Universal for her first starring film, "Day of Promise" . . . Ina Claire: Your leading man, Hugh Williams, who married Margaret Vyner, daughter of Sir Robert Vyner, will honeymoon in Bermuda—but not until your show closes . . . Sam Berman: Paul Stewart, who attracted movie offers as a result of his performance in your "Wine of Choice," has new stationery in which he refers to himself as "Star of Radio, Stage and Screeno."

DAVE SARNOFF: The N. B. C. page-boy who conducts Arturo Toscanini to your broadcasting studio, whistled in the elevator. The maestro threw up his hands in alarm and lamented: "You're flat" . . . In one of the rooms at N. B. C., a special refrigerator is reserved for Toscanini's use. One of the page-boys was anxious to learn what hallowed contents rest in this space reserved for the maestro's possible wants. He peeked—and found six bottles of gin.

BROADWAY ASSOCIATION: The Club Yumuri is expected to colse within two weeks and then to reopen at El Bango . . . Miriam Hopkins: Your former husband, Austin Parker, insisted last night that he'll control the new Hemingway play; that he has the $25,000 required and that he'll start rehearsals next week.

WILL HAYS: Jed Harris, producer of New York's favorite hit, "Our Town," has received a movie offer of $2,500 a week, but won't take it. "The last movie offer I got was for $10,000 a week," he explained, "and this would be too much of a come-down" . . . Niven Busch: Richard Collins, who worked with you in writing "In Old Chicago," received no screen credit but contributed enough to secure for him an Academy credit. Now, although you're one of the leading contenders for the Academy Award as a result of "In Old Chicago," Collins is jobless.

IRVING BERLIN: Alec Woollcott, to whom you sent an orchid tree when he opened in the Guild show, phoned Neysa McMein and told her he was sending her two tickets to the premiere. "Why two?" Miss McMein innocently asked. "Aren't you taking me?"

Players Learn Ventriloquism

With double-voiced entertainers, led by Edgar Bergen, climbing to fame in radio and films, amateur ventriloquists are being discovered in practically every Hollywood studio.

A typical illustration was provided last week on the set at Universal where the Trem Carr production, "State Police," is in production under direction of John Rawlins. For several days, the sound boom man, Frankie Garback, has aroused envy with demonstrations of his ability to throw his voice into trunks, bags, desks, and radio cabinets.

Intrigued by Garback's display of voice-tossing talent, the featured players in the cast, John King, Constance Moore, Larry Blake and William Lundigan have been bitten by the ventriloquism bug. Their spare time between scenes and dialogue rehearsals now is devoted to practice of the uncanny art, with Garback acting in the role of instructor.

Dunn Gives Bride Memory Bracelet

Frances Gifford, now playing an important part in "Vivacious Lady," has just received an unusual charm bracelet from Jimmy Dunn after one month of married life.

The bracelet carries miniatures of a telephone over which they first talked; the airplane in which they made a honeymoon trip, and the automobile in which they returned to Hollywood.

Universal Signs Charles Martin

Universal Studios last week announced that Charles Martin, brilliant young radio director and writer, had signed a long-term contract as a producer, director and writer, and will leave New York for Hollywood at once.

Reputedly the highest paid writer-producer in radio, Martin has been acclaimed by critics as the most imaginative and original author yet developed by that medium.

Martin resigned from an agency where he wrote and produced the Phillip Morris cigaret program, in order to take the position with Universal. Among the other programs with which he has been identified were "The March of Time," "Five Star Final," "Then and Now," "Three-Minute Thrills," and "Thrill of the Week."

After graduating from New York University in three years, Martin worked on a newspaper and later acted in a stage company with Eva LeGalliene.

Martin rejected offers from several other major Hollywood studios to sign the contract with Universal.

Simmons Would Become a Hero Again!

By Shirley Povich.
A Staff Correspondent.

Orlando, Fla.

Wesley Ferrell, who signed yesterday for a $15,000 salary, will be the highest paid Washington ball player in 1938, but Al Simmons is entitled to one boast, albeit a dubious one. Ferrell's wage will not equal Simmons' loss in baseball income. For Simmons, who this year will be paid $12,000 by the Nats, was for five seasons a $30,000 performer with the Athletics and White Sox.

POVICH.

Twelve grand will still buy considerable tea and crumpets, but the suspicion is that at this writing Simmons is not interested primarily in his 1938 salary. He is being driven back to baseball by a burning desire to re-establish himself among the big shots of the big leagues.

He admits to owning $200,000 in paid-up annuities besides other investments, and he could kiss off the remaining years of his baseball career without any strain on the family exchequer, but the black-browed Pole from Milwaukee is very much concerned with his baseball. It hasn't been easy for Simmons to step down out of the baseball sun and accept the role of a journeyman ball player.

Yearns for Public Acclaim.

He wants to hear again the roar of the multitudes acclaiming a long-distance Simmons hit. He wants to hear hotel clerks whisper in awe that "there goes Al Simmons." He wants those autograph hounds besieging him again, wants headwaiters to renew their old deference toward him, wants to swagger and strut and preen himself before the worshipful eyes of hero-loving fans.

He's fresh from five weeks at Hot Springs with Mrs. Simmons and the baby and the maid, and a three weeks' outing at Miami Beach at a de luxe hostelry. The $12,000 he'll draw from the Washington Club this season won't pay his living expenses. But at 36, Al Simmons isn't content to surrender the fame he knew from 1923 to 1933, when his appearance at the plate was a nightmare to American League pitchers, when the name of Al Simmons was something to conjure with.

He started slipping back in '34 when his batting average took a sustained nose-dive and he never has showed among the leading hitters since. Last season was his worst in the big leagues, when he hit only .280 for the Nats. Big

SIMMONS AND BOSS.
No Shrinking Violet He!

Al tries to laugh that figure off, but it's a hollow laugh. One more season like that, and Simmons will quit. To remain labeled as a .280-hitter would be too much for the proud Pole.

He's yearning, as I was saying, for a return to a big-shot role and the suspicion is that he'd pay Clark Griffith for the opportunity to re-establish himself, he's that serious about it.

There was the tinge of an excuse for Simmons' poor season in 1937. Twice he suffered an injured hand in a pair of freak accidents. He had a difficult time convincing an umpire that he was hit by a pitched ball thrown by Oral Hildebrand, of the Browns, at Griffith Stadium, but finally won his point. He won it conclusively the following day when X-ray pictures showed that Simmons' left hand had been broken by the pitch.

Thought They Saw Reason.

That same hand figured in another strange mishap a month later. It was stepped on by—of all people—an umpire. Simmons, with a neat slide into second base, successfully eluded Charley Gehringer, but he couldn't duck Umpire Harry Geisel, who dashed over toward the bag to call the play and stepped on Simmons' hand with his spikes, cutting it to the bone.

But there wasn't much doubt

Sabin and McNeill Advance In National Tennis Tourney

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 1.—Wayne Sabin, of Hollywood, Calif., and Don McNeill, Kenyon College student from Oklahoma City, who stand No. 2 on the seeded list, today gained their third consecutive straight-set victories to reach the quarter-final round of the men's national indoor singles tennis championship at the Seventh Regiment Armory.

Sabin, No. 6 in the Nation's first 10, played a keen all-court game that stressed biting service and brilliant volleying to win over Herbert L. Bowman, veteran New York indoor campaigner, 6—3, 6—2.

Gregory S. Mangin entered the quarter-finals, eliminating Julius Seligson of New York, 4—6, 6—1, 6—3.

Joseph Fishbach, unranked National Junior Indoor champion, eliminated Bernard Coghlan of Pacific Palisades, Calif., 9—7, 6—3. Fishbach, a student at St. John's University, Brooklyn, with a particular aptitude for board court play, was much too steady for Coghlan.

The bracket opposite Mangin in the round of eight was filled by Merritt Cutler, member of the home club. Trailing Sidney Seligson, brother of Julius, at 5—7, 2—0, Cutler won on a default when Seligson, coming in for a drop shot, fell and wrenched his leg muscles.

Frank J. Bowden continued his straight-set victory march by disposing of Lincoln Halberstadt, 8—6, 6—1. Leonard Hartman, former Columbia University star, drew the berth opposite McNeill

Western Beats Wilson In Last Game, 26-22

Red Raiders Rally to Close Interhigh Season With Victory; Small Crowd Watches; Holloran High Scorer.

By Jack Munhall.

Some 200 bored students watched the interhigh basketball race close yesterday as Western whipped Wilson, 26-22, at Roosevelt in the final game of the series.

By its surprisingly close victory, Western finished in a second-place tie with Roosevelt. Wilson, dropping its ninth encounter in ten starts, joined Central in the cellar. It is the second year in a row that the Presidents have occupied that spot, although this season their steady improvement was a feature of the dull series.

Taking an early lead on some fine shooting by Don Fugler, Wilson apparently was headed for an upset until Western snapped from its lethargic play in the last half. Even then the Presidents had enough in reserve to fight back with a last-period spurt that all but swept the Georgetowners before them.

Wilson held an 8-2 advantage at the end of the opening quarter as Fugler slapped in two baskets and a free throw, but fell behind, 13-12, at half, due to the under-the-basket shooting of big Len Stanton, Western's center. Western, once in the van, seemed to improve a little and ran the count to 22-17 in the third period as Bob Holloran rammed in three spectacular set shots from the side court.

With the issue apparently settled in Western's favor, Wilson opened up with a long-distance barrage by Dave Maloney and Findley and cut the margin to 21-23 after Stanton had scored a foul toss for Western. However, the threat subsided and died immediately as Holloran and Swanson counted a basket and a free throw to push Western into a prohibitive lead what with only 1½ minutes left to play.

Stanton and Holloran led Western's point scorers with 7 and 9, respectively. Fugler was best for the losers with 8.

Hearing on Race Bill Is Set Today By House Group

A bill to legalize horse racing in the District will be aired this morning at the weekly meeting of the House District Committee. The current measure is sponsored by Representative Lon Sacks (Democrat), of Pennsylvania.

Proposed terms of the bill call for 54 days of racing annually, with track operators required to pay a license fee of $6,000 daily, plus 1 per cent of the amount wagered. Employes of the track would be licensed, also, and required to pay a $2 fee.

A similar bill, introduced by Senator Robert Reynolds (Democrat), of North Carolina, still is before the Senate District Committee.

A racing bill was introduced last year by Representative Mary Norton, of New Jersey, and after lengthy hearings finally was placed on the calendar. It was recalled near the end of the session, however, and pigeon-holed.

If the bill is enacted into law it will mean re-opening of the old Benning track, which was closed in 1908 when Congress banned gambling in all forms in the Nation's Capital.

Mike Phipps Earns Nine-Goal Rating

New York, March 1 (AP).—Michael G. Phipps has been placed alongside the veteran Winston Guest with a handicap of nine goals in the ratings of the Indoor Polo Association of America.

Phipps, who also is handicapped at nine goals outdoors and rode with the national champions, Old Westbury, last year, is Guest's teammate on the Optimists.

The handicap committee, which each year adjusts the ratings prior to the start of the sectional eliminations and national championships, also raised Clarence C. (Buddy) Combs, star of Evergreen Farms, from six to seven goals; C. E. (Stub) Davis, of Boulder Brook, from four to five, and Wilbert Zimmerman, of Ridgewood, from three to four.

Greenbelt Five Wins Opener, 36-14

The Greenbelt Community basketball team made a successful debut in local circles last night, swamping Colonial Village, 36-14, before a large crowd in Greenbelt Community Hall.

After the mayor had thrown out the first ball, Greenbelt went right to work and quickly put the game on ice.

Sidwell and Bozek, with 13 and 7 points, respectively, were the big guns in the Greenbelt attack. J. Newbold scored three baskets to lead the losers.

Ford Frick Returns.

Workman Displaced as Jockey For Seabiscuit in Santa Anita Trainer Smith Says He Gave Howard Horse Bad Ride Saturday; Georgie Woolf to Get Mount.

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, March 1 — Seabiscuit got a new rider today and it stopped raining, all of which brought new twists to the pre-race arguments over the $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap Saturday.

Veteran Little Georgie Woolf, who booted Azucar and himself into fame by winning the first "hundred grand" at Santa Anita in 1935, was named to pilot Seabiscuit in the big race.

Woolf, a money rider, replaced Sonny Workman, who rode the mighty 'Biscuit last Saturday and lost to Aneroid. The jockey switching was necessitated when Charles S. Howard's regular rider, Jack "Red" Pollard, was hurt in a spill 10 days ago.

Owner Howard apparently thought Workman gave Seabiscuit a good ride, considering the horse hadn't raced in three months, but Tom Smith, the trainer, thought otherwise.

"I suppose Workman will be pretty sore about this, but he's no sorer than I was after the way he bungled with Seabiscuit Saturday," Smith said.

While many railbirds thought Workman performed well, Smith blamed him for not giving Seabiscuit a few more whacks with the whip as Seabiscuit rushed down the stretch, a neck or so back of Aneroid, and for getting pocketed at the start.

Whether Woolf can handle Seabiscuit as well, or better, on his first ride aboard the California-owned express remains to be seen.

Today's peep of sunshine brought joy to more than one stable, and a fervent prayer issued from Santa Anita for continued clear weather.

The track still looks like a circular hog wallow, but an expensive drainage system and help from the elements will correct that before Saturday.

Weather predictions varied, however, leaving handicappers in a state of dizziness. As soon as they drag out their mudding records, it begins to clear. If they begin to look into the marks on fast tracks, it clouds up. They may know more about the prospects tomorrow.

Joey Archibald Will Headline Fight Card at Arena Monday

Joey Archibald, mighty midget of maul, will headline Monday night's boxing program at the Arena, it was learned definitely last night, thereby reducing Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn's worries by 50 per cent, and assuring the customers of a better-than-average top bout.

Ahearn, meanwhile, was furiously thumbing his way through the 'phone book, dropping quarters in the long distance slot with reckless abandon, and vehemently arguing with managers in an effort to sign an opponent for him. He expected to make connections today.

The field has narrowed down to three men, Armada Sicilia, Al Reid and Johnny Mirebella, and the latter appears to be the most likely to get the bid. Sicilia, however, takes rank over him, and may appear opposite Archibald if his manager can get together with Ahearn on terms.

Signing of Archibald is a distinct triumph for Ahearn, who has been at odds with the little fellow and his manager, Sammy Goldman, for many months. The matchmaker contends it was purely a financial difference, but there was another small item deep down beneath the surface which caused the friction. Now that it has been removed the way is open for more Archibald appearances here.

A title match with Sixto Escobar, world's bantamweight champion, has been promised Archibald in return for his agreement to fight here Monday. Lou Brix, the Puerto Rican's pilot, already has agreed to such a bout and it probably will

All Nats Are Signed

Wes Ferrell Takes Cut, Johnny Stone Gets Raise; Livingston's Batting Style Pleases Harris.

By Shirley Povich.
A Staff Correspondent.

Orlando, Fla., March 1.—Clark C. Griffith, a slightly worried figure for the past two months, broke into a cheerful whistle today. The reason?

He had, safely in his possession, the signed contract of every member of the 1938 Washington ball club.

The last of his contract worries were swept away in two conferences this morning. The Nats' owner went autograph hunting in a pair of sessions with Pitcher Wes Ferrell and Outfielder Johnny Stone and emerged with the signatures of both.

Ferrell he wheedled into taking a mild salary cut. Stone he was compelled to hand a $1,000. But, contrary to expectations, he encountered little difficulty in signing either of the pair.

According to Griffith, Ferrell very graciously admitted that he didn't earn the $16,000 salary last year and was satisfied to take a $15,000 contract for this season. Stone, arguing from the vantage point of his .331 batting average of last season, extracted a $11,000 contract from Griffith.

He Earned Increase.

Thus Stone received a pay increase for the third consecutive season, as befits the man who for three years has proved the best run producer on the Washington club. He has been wintering at Clearwater, Fla., and will not don a uniform until the regular infielders and outfielders report on March 8.

Out at Tinker Field where his athletes limbered up in their second workout of the spring campaign, Griffith watched with Manager Bucky Harris as young Tom Livingston staged a batting display.

Curious about the hitting habits of the young catcher from Chattanooga who is slated to be the Nats No. 2 backstop, the Washington bosses saw a tall, athletic-looking youth take a sharp cut at the pitching and spray the outfield with line drives. There was much nodding of heads and other signs of approval as the rookies belted the ball about.

Livingston Impresses.

He wasn't hitting much in the way of pitching, though. The ball was being served up by "Kelly" Cohen, the Hebraic clubhouse boy, and by Harris himself. But Livingston's batting style was nevertheless impressive.

The batting session today marked a new departure in the training of the Nats. In former years, no player was even permitted to handle a bat until at least a week of training, but tradition was blasted by Al Simmons, who apparently didn't know the rules.

He grabbed a bat, signaled "Kelly" to the box and started whaling the ball. In a twinkling a half dozen others grabbed bats, and before Harris noted the proceedings the batting drill was on. On the theory that it would help inject some fun into the drudgery of training, the Nats' manager refused to call a halt.

Harris is reserving opinion on the newcomers until he can see them under fire, but he has already singled out Livingston as the prize of the lot. With Trainer Mike Martin keeping an eagle eye on the pitching rookies, there has been nothing more than a lob delivered up to the catchers.

The Brothers Ferrell, Wes and Rick, were in uniform for the first time and handsome Wes was the target of dozens of amateur photographers who clicked their shutters at him all morning. Wes has given up golf in disgust after losing in the first round of the ball players tournament at Sarasota.

Tomorrow Harris will take Monte Weaver aside for the annual session devoted to helping Weaver conceal his pitching delivery. His habit of exposing his grip on the ball has cut Weaver's effectiveness 30 per cent, according to Harris.

Joe Haynes, the Jacksonville rookie, was out of uniform today while undergoing an examination in his left arm. His luck could be worse. It could have been his right arm—his pitching arm.

Generals Delay Scrimmage.

Lexington, Va., March 1 (AP).—Washington and Lee athletic officials announced today the Generals' spring football scrimmage scheduled for tomorrow with the V. M. I. Keydets has been postponed because of recent cold weather which retarded practice. The scrimmage probably will be held next week.

Patty Berg Wins Medal In Florida

East Coast Play Sees Patty Off Toward Fifth Title.

By the Associated Press.

St. Augustine, Fla., March 1.—Patty Berg, of Minneapolis, made a bid today for her fifth straight winter golf tournament by firing a 36, 39—75 to take the medal in the qualifying round of the Florida East Coast Women's championship.

In the face of a sweeping north wind, the red-haired Patty was five shots better than her nearest competitor, Mrs. Charles Newbold, Wichita, Kans., who needed 42, 38—80.

Only once did Patty falter. On the twelfth her second shot found a trap and, after a poor recovery, she 3-putted the green for a 6. However, she quickly found the range again and finished with a 39. Her outgoing 36 was one better than men's par.

Kathryn Hemphill, of Columbia, S. C., who defeated Miss Berg in the finals last year, had to be contented today with a 41, 40—81. This earned her a two-way tie with Marion McDougall, Portland, Oreg., for third place.

Patty came here fresh from her victory at Ormond Beach in the South Atlantic championship. Prior to the Ormond Beach event, she has won this season tournaments at Augusta, Punta Gorda and Coral Gables.

U.S. Opposes Games Delay

Paris, March 1 (AP).—Avery Brundage, American delegate to the International Amateur Athletic Federation Congress here, voiced strong opposition today to a Japanese suggestion that the dates for the 1940 Olympic games in Tokyo be changed because of hot weather during the months of August and September.

Japanese representatives argued the Olympic committee fixed the dates without being aware of the humidity in the island capital during those months and suggested the games be held during the last of September and the first of October.

Brundage declared if the later time is approved at the forthcoming meeting of the international Olympic committee at Cairo, American students will lose a part of their school work since they will be unable to return to the United States until the latter part of October.

The Japanese suggestion was approved by Germany while England and France upheld Brundage's views. The proposal was advanced here only for discussion since a change in the dates can only be made at the Cairo meeting.

Matsuzo Magai, the Japanese representative, said "the question of Japanese military action in China does not enter the discussion because everybody in Japan figures the fighting will be over by then. Even if not, he said, it will not affect holding the games in Tokyo."

Only one delegate—the Norwegian Oppegaard—said he was forced to "regret publicly" that the games were given to a nation at war. He said although Japan failed to call its invasion of China war, "there is little doubt but what it is."

G. W. Stops Mike Novak, Wins Opener

2,500 See Capt. O'Brien and Faris Star in Thrilling Game.

By Bob Garrison.

George Washington's Classy Colonials cut 6 ft. 9 in. Mike Novak down to their size last night then marched one step nearer the National Basketball Tournament by defeating the stubborn Loyola University of Chicago five at Tech gym, 44-39.

Employing a deadly salvo of eight set-shots fired by Bob Faris from the corners and five foul goals from the steady fingers of Capt. Tommy O'Brien as effective axes, the Colonials avenged a previous defeat as a crowd of 2,500 sat in on the most pulsating game of the season.

The air, tight with the importance of the clash, was filled with arch set-shots by the winners until the outstretched arms of "Snow Mike" Novak had been scaled and the first game of the crucial two-game series won. The triumph, paired with a similar one tonight, would put the local club in the First Annual National Tournament in New York, March 9, it is reliably reported.

Faris Fires Goals.

It might be said that Faris, stellar junior forward, brightened the corner where he was. For, after a week of practice at the shot, he calmly flipped eight goals from his stationed position that just about spelled defeat for the Windy City Club.

Tommy O'Brien was the other steadying influence that kept the team of sophomores and juniors from cracking under the strain. Twice, late in the game, when the Ramblers caught the Colonials, he shook them off with his cool shooting.

As Faris led the way with five field goals, George Washington moved from 7-7 into a five-point lead and then stayed that far out in front until the half, at which time it led, 20-15.

But the Ramblers, paced by Capt. Bob Brennan and Wee Jack Driscoll, oe of "Snow Mike's" dwarfs, caught the locals at 27-all and at that point, O'Brien stepped to the foul lile to put his club back in front with a foul goal.

Chicagoans Get Ahead.

Driscoll, who stands but 5 feet 5 inches, evaded the entire team of husky Colonials to cut under the basket and take a quick pass from Wib Kautz, who led the Rambler scoring with 11 points, and the Chicagoans were out in front again, 29-28, with five minutes to go.

George Garber flicked a set shot from the center, but when Brennan matched it from half-court, the Colonials were behind once more. But it was the last time.

For O'Brien, arched one over Novak, who stands under the basket and attempts to bat the approaching ball from the path to the rim, and the Colonials were out in front, 34-32, and on the victory road.

After that goal Garber hit the mark again and after Kautz had made good a show-bird shot and George Hogan had contributed a foul for Loyola, reliable O'Brien fired another and he and his team went into a 36-34 lead.

Roughness Is Rampant.

Faris soon added two fouls and O'Brien threw in his fourth and fifth fouls to bat 1.000 in that respect and the score was 39-32.

From then on in most of the action was confined to roughness on the floor and at one time the game was halted for 3 minutes after Tommy O'Brien and George Hogan nearly came to blows. Novak and Sik Silkowitz squared off under the basket on another occasion but Referees Joe and Oral Mitchell controlled the game in commendable fashion.

Novak batted 13 shots from the Loyola backboard, several of which appeared certain goals, but fine guarding by Jack Butterworth rendered him unable to score or pass to teammates from his block position. The Colonials worked well against the zone-defense and before the game was ended brought Loyola out of it. When that happened it was a give-away.

The Ramblers were through for the night. But as Coach Lennie Sachs pointed out after the game, there's still tonight, when the two teams meet again, same place at 8:30 o'clock.

Chronister and Kehoe Race Track Greats on Saturday

University of Maryland will be represented in both of the headline events of the Terp-Fifth Regiment indoor games in the latter's spacious armory, in Baltimore, Saturday night.

Coach Geary (Swede) Eppley has decided to place Mason Chronister, sophomore runner, in the Governor's mile in which the great Glenn Cunningham and Gene Venzke will race, while Frank Cronin, veteran ace of the Maryland team, will run in the Oriole 600 in which Charlie Beetham and Bill Ray, last year's winner, will be ace competitors.

Archie San Romani, Bill Morse, of Duke; Jim Davis, of North Carolina, and Joe Johnston, of Philadelphia, will be others in the mile classic for which Gov. Nice of Maryland provides the trophy.

Jack Harley, of Lenox A. A., New York; Harold Johnson, of Duke, and Bill Hendrix, of North Carolina, also will be in the Oriole 600 field.

Cunningham, of course will be the favorite in the mile, while Beetham, former Ohio State star, is picked to take away Ray's title in the 600.

Maryland also will have Jim Kehoe, another soph star, in the 2-mile race in which Joe McCluskey will strive for a world record. McCluskey, member of the New York Athletic Association, showed he is ready for the test by winning the 3,000-meter title in the A. A. U. in New York last Saturday night.

It was in this meet that Cunningham ran to a new world record of 1,500 meters and that Beetham, beaten by a step, forced Johnny Herbert to set a new world figure for the 600 meters.

The withdrawal of the sixth team entered in the Collegiate mile of the Terp-Fifth Regiment indoor games may result in the

Palamede's Late Drive Wins Purse

Ramsey's Entry Defeats Corinto and Burning Star; Pays $5.70.

By the Associated Press.

Hialeah Park, Fla., March 1.—Two horses that finished far back in the recent McLennan Memorial ran one, two in the featured Trade Winds Purse of 1 mile today. Mrs. Kirby Ramsey's Palamede, coupled with Mucho Gusto, was first home by a head. Mrs. Emil Denemark's Corinto gained the place by a half length. Burning Star, away from competition since November, carried the Sandon Farm silks of Richard and Patrick Nash to third money.

Under Charlie Kurtsinger, Palamede reached the wire in 1:37 3-5 and returned $5.70. The winner is not eligible for Saturday's Widener Cup.

The favored Burning Star, winner of six of his 20 starts last year, including the Travers and Saranac at Saratoga and the Maryland Handicap at Laurel, for earnings of $41,375, ran with all four legs bandaged. He made up a lot of ground and it was an impressive performance by the Chicagoan, which has been pointing for the Widener. The other Widener nominees in the field were Corinto, Infantry, which finished fourth, and Mucho Gusto, which was fifth. Mucho Gusto and Infantry faltered after displaying early foot. Blackbirder brought up the rear.

Shining One Wins.

Mucho Gusto led the small field for half the journey, then dropped back as suddenly improved Corinto shot into command and opened up daylight over Palamede. Kurtsinger kept pounding with the latter through the stretch and finally drove his mount past Corinto in the last sixteenth of a mile. Burning Star did not have a horse headed at the far turn. The colt ate up the ground from that point home and was gaining with every stride as they neared the wire. He beat Infantry by two lengths for the show. The son of Burning Blaze carried top weight of 116 pounds.

One of the most widely circulated "good things" of the Florida season won the opening dash for maiden 2-year-olds. John Hay Whitney's Shining One, a son of Twink—Oonagh, with Eddie Arcaro on his back, made good on advance reports, driving to the wire three-quarters of a length on top to pay $4.20 for $2. To Town raced along with the winner and was much the best of the others. The Jamestown filly had five lengths margin over the neglected Gibor. Shining One stepped the 3 furlongs in :34 1-5.

Early Settler Fails.

After a bitter stretch battle in which the first three horses fought it out well in advance of the remainder of the field, Petit Jean took the second race by a head, with Pine Frills a length before My Wo. The victor returned $11.10.

The form players had an inning when Sketchbook managed to head Catalysis for the fifth purse. Join Us was third in the field of a half dozen 3-year-old fillies, three lengths behind. Sketchbook ran the 6 furlongs in 1:12 flat and paid $5.20.

Hugh Jackson's Early Settler brought deep gloom to those who backed the colt into odds-on favoritism in the third race of a mile and a furlong. Racing on the rail all the way, the son of Swift and Sure finished third. Pompey's Pillar took the purse by a half length from the long shot Kenyon C., which made the running into the last furlong. Early Settler was beaten a head for the place. The winner paid $8.50 and completed the trip in 1:52.

PETIT JEAN, going prominently on the outside of the leader from the start, closed with determination through the stretch and got up in the last strides. PINE FRILLS, displaying his best form, took command at the start, displayed good speed and made a game effort when challenged, but could not withstand the winner's bid. MY WO, well up and saving ground for the entire trip, held on tenaciously under strong pressure.

Daily Double, Shining One and Petit Jean, Paid $36.30.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—POMPEY'S PILLAR, $8.50, $4.30, $2.50; KENYON C., $12.80, $3.30; EARLY SETTLER, $2.20.

POMPEY'S PILLAR broke in full stride, but was eased off the pace going to the first turn, and followed the leader closely on the outside and, responding gamely through the stretch, took command in the last sixteenth mile. KENYON C. broke forwardly, cut EARLY SETTLER off going to the first turn and hustled to the front, displayed good speed while saving ground and outlasted EARLY SETTLER in the final drive. EARLY SETTLER, a prominent contender throughout, was effectively pocketed by the two leaders until the last 70 yards when he slipped through next to the inner rail, but then hung in the closing strides.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—PLAY CHANCE, $13.70, $6.10, $4.20; MOTHEL, $7.10, $5.50; PARITY, $3.90.

PLAY CHANCE, under stout restraint and saving ground until midway around the lower turn, swung to the outside on the stretch turn, took command with a rush, but then was strongly ridden to stave off MOTHEL'S bid. The latter, steadied off the leaders in the early running, gradually bettered his position when placed to pressure, but could not overhaul the winner. PARITY raced BOMAR into submission and faltered in the last quarter mile, yet held the others safe.

FIFTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,100; allowances. The Lake Worth. For 3-year-old fillies. Start good from Bahr gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 4:00. Off 4:01. Winner, W. J. Hirsch's b. f. (3), by Zacaweista—Battle of Flowers. Trained by owner. Value to winner, $775; second, $175; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:23, 0:46 3-5, 1:12.

SKETCHBOOK, away alertly, was in tight quarters in the run down the backstretch and was compelled to ease back, slipped through on the inside midway around the turn, came around the leaders when straightened into the stretch, closed courageously and outlasted CATALYSIS when the final issue came. CATALYSIS displayed keen speed and raced JIM'S NIECE into submission, made a game effort when put to a drive, but faltered in the final 40 yards. JOIN US, outrun early, saved much ground entering the stretch and disposed of ONE JEST in the final furlong.

SIXTH RACE—One mile (out of chute). Purse, $1,200; allowances. The Trade Winds. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 4:30. Off 4:31½. Two-dollar mutuels paid—PALAMEDE (entry), $5.70, $3.00, $2.20; CORINTO, $4.80, $2.70; BURNING STAR, $2.40.

PALAMEDE, permitted to settled into his stride in the opening three furlongs, moved up stoutly while stealing through on the inside rounding the lower turn, came around CORINTO when straightened into the stretch and outlasted him when the final test came. CORINTO, well up and also slipping through on the inside, took command entering the stretch, but then was unable to withstand the winner's bid. BURNING STAR, slow to get going, closed a big gap in the last quarter mile and finished fastest of all. INFANTRY, prominent on the outside, was carried out by MUCHO GUSTO after entering the backstretch to the stretch turn, where he faltered.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles (on the turf). Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won ridden out; place driving. Went to post 5:03. Off 5:05½. JACK PATCHES, quickest to get going, drew clear going to the first turn and, saving ground while being steadied in front, maintained his lead with determination under strong pressure through the stretch. SUN MICA, always in nearest pursuit of the leader, finished courageously, but could not reach the winner. MAECLOUD, a trailer for six furlongs, slipped through on the inside entering the stretch and finished stoutly and outlasted KNIGHT WARRIOR.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post 5:37. Off 5:39. Winner, Mrs. G. R. STONE MARTIN, keen factor and saving ground in the early running, moved to the front with a rush rounding the lower turn, drew out into a commanding lead to win as his rider pleased. ONE CHANCE, slow to get going, gained steadily on the outside in the last three furlongs and wore AIRLAP down in the final drive. AIRLAP, well up on the outside from the start, faltered in the stretch run.

Terps to Run Against Aces

unusual spectacle of a five-team relay race in Baltimore, Saturday night, it was revealed yesterday.

Georgetown, Maryland and Navy have been paired in the first race, with Washington-Lee, North Carolina and Duke scheduled to clash in the other heat, but the possible failure of Duke to apear will necessitate the running of the remaining teams in one heat.

Only the expansive width of the vast armory track permits the five-team race, which, however, will not be run if the Blue Devil team puts in its appearance.

Georgetown's crack mile relay team that set a new record at the Southern Conference meet Saturday will be favorite to win against the Terp team and the Middies. It is composed of Stuart Reeves, John Motzenbecker, George Bogan and Erwin Water.

Douglas Hankes, winner of last year's event, will represent the Hoyas in the College Mile, Coach James Mulligan announced, and Vincent Braun will compete in the Oriole 660.

Other entries include Ossie Bertucci, Bill Burke and Mort Alnwick, 70-yard dash; John Buckley, high jump; George Walker and Alf Frey, 1,000-yard run; Joe Kilcullen, 16-pound shotput, and Bertucci, Alnwick, Burke and Charles Neumyer in the freshmen relay.

Jack Ford, pole vaulter, will be entered in the national intercollegiate games at New York, Saturday night, Mulligan stated.

Wirephoto: Jeffra's Broken Jaw

Harry Jeffra, the Baltimore bantamweight who lost the world title to Sixto Escobar in Puerto Rico eight days ago, was put into this brace yesterday after a doctor said he had suffered a double fracture of the jaw in the fight. He will have to wear the frame two or three weeks.

that Simmons was in for a poor season, nevertheless. In his first eight games in Griffith Stadium, he failed to make a hit. And early in May he was benched by Manager Bucky Harris for failing to hit. The Simmons swagger had left big Al during his batting slump, but his Washington teammates still remembered him as the big-shot star of former years.

They thought they saw the reason for Simmons' slump—he wasn't using any backswing. But they wouldn't tell him. They were scared. They didn't want to presume to tell a great hitter like Simmons how to hit. At the same moment, almost, Simmons, in another part of the dressing room was saying, "I wish to hell somebody would tell me what I'm doing wrong."

Paradoxically, Simmons' fielding has held up nicely in the sunset years of his career, while his batting eye has been failing him. It is axiomatic that a veteran's legs are the first to give way; that the good hitter will be a good hitter as long as he can be carted to the plate with a bat in his hand; that his batting eye endures.

At that, Simmons apparently is falling victim to the same late-year slump that has affected other great hitters. It is his ill-fortune to be a so-called "double-hitch" hitter, meaning that he takes a slight extra jerk in his batting stroke. In his younger days, he could take that extra hitch and still get his bat around against any kind of pitching, but Simmons has been in the league 15 years and a 36-year-old player is an old-timer in big league baseball.

Time was when Simmons used to hit even bad pitches, but now American League pitchers will tell you that they can throw their fast, straight one past him; that he can't get his bat around quick enough. Ruth, in his declining years, when he was suffering from extra poundage around the middle, was also fed those fast balls, that, in his salad days, he used to murder. And if you want to know the pitch that they're chucking to Jimmy Foxx these days it's also a straight fast one, the kind he used to kill a few seasons back.

Down here at the Nats' camp they're touting young George Washington Case, late of Trenton, as the Nats' third regular outfielder. He'll take over Simmons' job, they whisper. But, my friends, not without a furious struggle on the part of Aloyisus Harry Simmons. Big Al wants once more to fill his ears with the music of the multitudes who come to cheer. It's the old firehorse in him!

War Admiral Awaits Big Race

Hialeah Park, Fla., March 1 (AP).

This was final work day for the candidates for the $50,000 Widener Challenge Cup run here Saturday and many of the eligibles were out doing their stuff today. War Admiral, the 3-to-5 shot for the big race, was sent the full mile and a quarter in 2:06, going the distance rather handily. Piccolo and Tatterdemalion did the distance in 2:07, both going handily at the end.

Court Scandal, winner of the 1937 Flamingo Stakes, turned in a very impressive trial by stepping 10 furlongs in 2:06. According to plans, War Admiral will leave Hialeah Park Monday. The horse will be shipped back to the farm at Berlin, Md.

Terps to Box Extra Match

Will Forfeit 175-Pound Bout With Rutgers.

Because Maryland will offer no competition in the 175-pound class, Rutgers' boxing team has agreed to fight two 165-pounders to keep the match on an eight-bout basis, Coach Heinie Miller of Maryland announced yesterday.

Pointing out that he did the same for the "Do or Die Boys" last year, Miller said that in place of the 175-pound bout which he must forfeit because of Ralph (Blackie) Pearson's broken nose, he has acquired permission to use both Newton Cox and Dick Johnson, 155-pound representatives, at New Brunswick, Saturday.

Coach Earl Lovejoy of the Scarlet team notified Miller that although he would accept the forfeit, which gives the Terps a deficit of one bout before their final match of the season opens, he would be willing to add the extra bout to round out the card.

The Old Liners will be seeking to win their second match of the season, having defeated Western Maryland, and suffered defeats at the hands of Catholic University and Virginia. It drew with Duke and the Coast Guard Academy, 4 to 4.

Maryland will be represented in other classes by George (Red) Dorr, 115 pounds; Benny Alperstein, 125 pounds; Nathan Askin, 135 pounds; Jose de Peralta, 145 pounds; John (Moe) Egan, 165 pounds, and Joe Henderson, heavyweight.

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 1.—Joe Beggs has a habit of doing things in a big way the first time he tries them, and he hopes his first pitching trial with the New York Yankees will prove as successful as other first attempts.

Beggs, a tall, well-proportioned and rather handsome, brown-haired youngster from Aliquippa, Pa., has joined the Yankee squad here—preceded by much fanfare. He is regarded as one of the most promising rookies coming up to the big time this season.

Last year, as one of the aces of Newark's "wonder team" of the International League, Beggs ranked second in earned runs and second in the won and lost figures for his circuit. He won 21 and lost 4, and had an earned run average of 2.61.

It's peculiar how Steel-Mill Joe does things so well the first time When he was a junior at Aliquippa High School, home of the track team was practicing near the baseball diamond where Joe was working out. Joe was a catcher then.

Makes Track Team

One of the track men hurled a javelin, and it landed too close to Joe for comfort. Beggs picked it up and tossed it back easily, yelling at the same time, "don't throw that thing over here again or I'll fling it out the park." The track men thought this was a very good joke, indeed, the idea of anyone throwing the javelin out of the park. So—back came the spear and it landed even closer to Joe's feet. Angered, Joe picked it up and hurled it over the fence and into some stumps outside, where the javelin was broken. It was a toss of more than 180 feet, and it was the first time he ever had tried it.

Well—the track coach put Beggs on the squad immediately. The next week he topped a tri-state tourney, and he continued to do so well that he won a track scholarship to Geneva College, at Beaver Falls, Pa. At college, he threw the javelin 206 feet, which was near record distance in those days.

Goes to Geneva

Joe started to pitch with a similar inaugural. When he first began playing baseball in high school, he was a catcher. But in that same junior year, the coach needed someone to do some emergency flinging for a game. He asked Joe to shift from backstop to the mound. He did and amazed everyone by pitching a no-hit, no-run game. He was a pitcher from then on.

Geneva College had no baseball team, but Joe got plenty of diamond experience playing sand-lot ball under an assumed name at Youngstown on Sundays, and on a steel mill team under his own name in Aliquippa during vacations. He worked in the mills as an open hearth tender. "And I sweat plenty!"

The Yanks' brilliant prospect first tried out with Pittsburgh, but the Pirates couldn't see him and couldn't seem to farm him out anywhere, so Joe asked for his release and got it. He then went to the Washington, Pa., club and played there two weeks at the close of the '34 season. Benny Bengough, former Yankee catcher, managed the Washington, Pa., club and taught Joe much about pitching. Beggs shifted to the Akron, Ohio, club in '35 and played there under Johnny Neun, who now manages Newark.

In '36, Neun went to Norfolk, Va., and took Joe with him. And last season Joe made the big jump from little Norfolk to Newark's "wonder team."

Although the 185-pound right-hander has plenty of speed and a repertoire of curves, his two greatest assets are control and a fast sinker. Newark baseball writers say his control is amazing.

Beggs and his brilliant moundmate from Newark, Atley Donald, are the two most promising of the Yanks' rookie flingers. Tall, lanky Donald beat out Beggs for the best won and lost figure in the International League last season, with 19 won and 2 lost.

D. C. to Send 8 Boxers to College Meet

Terp-Card Coaches Declare Entries Are Qualified for Nationals.

Eight local boxers who will enter the National Intercollegiate Tournament at Charlottesville, Va., March 31, April 15 and 2, are beyond danger of being excluded because of the "experience" clause, according to Coaches Edde LaFond and Heinie Miller, of Catholic and Maryland universities, respectively.

Both have pointed out that the men they will enter have not participated in competition which is outlawed by the new ruling that will restrict boys who have participated in "public boxing contests with the exception of interscholastic . . . recognized N. C. A. A. competition or Olympic trials."

LaFond, who will send four men to the University of Virginia, pointed out that two have never boxed outside of college while the remaining pair fought under A. A. U. auspices or as part of Olympic trials.

Miller stated that the quartet he will sbmit for entrance is on the safe side in that only one has ever fought outside of college. Benny Alperstein, national 135-pound champion, has fought in "entertainment" bouts at National Guard camps as a member of the Maryland militia, but these bouts have no objectionable aspects, Miller said.

George Dorr, Nathan Askin and Ralph Pearson, other boxers he will send to the classic, have fought in collegiate contests only, according to the Old Line coach.

LaFond pointed out that Leo Katalinas and Davy Bernstein, heavyweight and 115-pounder, respectively, are strictly college competitors, and that although Fred Stant was A. A. U. champion in Norfolk, as a member of the Belmont Abbey School, he was legitimately participating in Olympic trials.

Jay Turner, local boy who fought with the Merrick Boys Club, was only in interclub action, according to LaFond, and in all probability will not be barred.

Murphy Is High In List of Doctor Wrestling Stars

Looking back over a list of physicians who have turned from curing human ills to putting others on their backs, Joe Turner, local trafficker in pachyderms, yesterday decided that Dr. John (Dropkick) Murphy is one of the best physician wrestlers to come over the horizon in a long time.

It was a timely decision, for Dr. Murphy meets Jesse James tomorrow at the arena in a bold attempt to lift Mr. James' light-heavyweight wrestling crown, and undoubtedly will need a lot of support.

The good doctor's most potent remedy for ambitious opponents is a combination arm and leg lock that wowed the customers the first time he revealed it here a couple of months back. That was against Jimmy Londos, and while the little man from the land of chefs won, the doctor gained many friends by his industry and polish.

Murphy, incidentally, is the real McCoy as a physician, possessing a degree from the Middlesex School of Surgery and Medicine, of Boston, and a State practitioner's license. He plans to open his office next year.

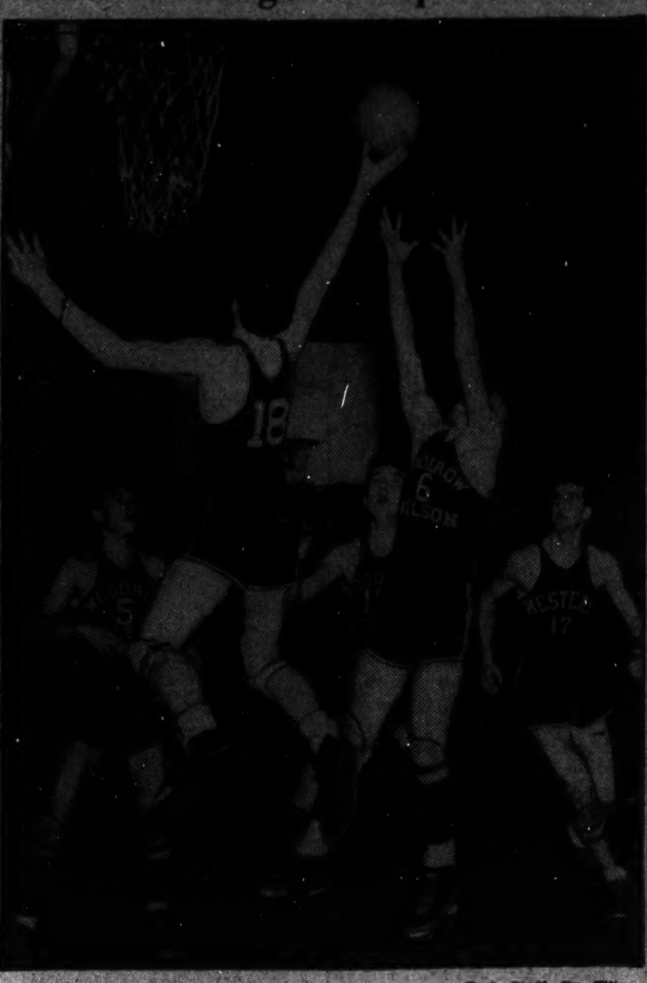
Custer's Prodigious Leap All in Vain



Post Staff By Ellis.

Ace Western forward jumps fully 2½ feet off the floor to follow a stray shot but his effort falls short of the basket. Malcolm MacDonald (No. 6), of Wilson, has his hands outstretched. Behind him is Findley, Wilson center, while Fugler, another Wilson player, is in front of Custer. Stanton, Western center (No. 17), also is shown.

The Punch Line . . .

By Lewis F. Atchison.

D. C. Boxing Commission,
462 Indiana Avenue, N. W.,
City.
Gentlemen:

We are glad to see you come out with that warning to Benny Leonard concerning coaching from the corner and dousing his fallen fighter with water in his recent bout with Lou Gevinson. People were beginning to talk. They were saying a local manager would be set down instantly for such tactics, but that you were a bit leery of approaching a gent of Leonard's reputation. That letter should stop the tongue-wagging.

Yours, LEW ATCHISON.

P. S. That was a nice piece of matchmaking last Monday, and we hope you didn't establish a dangerous precedent. Will the matchmaker be able to say, if the fans are dissatisfied with a certain bout, "Well, don't blame me. Didn't the commission approve the match?"

Joey Archibald is one fighter who has done progressively better in every appearance here, financially speaking. He started with Buddy Grimes for a paltry $75 preliminary joust; received $100 the next time out for flattening Larry Gunn; then $400 for a ditto performance at Ray Ingram's expense. From there he jumped to $2,175 for fighting Lou Gevinson; and was handed a cool grand for an easy workout with Joey Marciente.

L'affaire Marciente, incidentally, caused the rupture in the good relations between Goldie Ahearn and Sammy Goldman, Archibald's manager. Ahearn wanted Lightweight Champion Lou Ambers for a bout with Howard Scott, but Goldman wouldn't sign unless Archibald was included on the card. Ahearn was agreeable until he learned it would cost him $1,000. He was given his choice between Archibald for a grand, or no Ambers. He took him.

It was so bad, or rather Marciente was, Archibald won easily despite the handicap of a cracked rib. Goldie wanted to cancel the match upon hearing of the injury, but Goldman wouldn't stand for it, and the rotund matchmaker never quite recovered from the shook of being outsmarted.

Monday's bout, incidentally, will be Archibald's first indoor appearance locally.

It has been suggested that Lou Gevinson would keep his opponents on the deck if he had the benefit of 5-ounce gloves such as those used in New York. A glove that small is nothing more than a striking bag mitten, or merely a strip of leather. The 8-ounce pillows used here are mountainous masses of leather by comparison. Even with 2 ounces up around the wrist they still are much heavier, and this, certain parties contend, is the reason Gevinson fails to finish his man.

They like to compare the huge gloves to the baseball's famed "dead" ball. If Babe Ruth, they say, didn't have the advantage of a "lively" ball he never would have hit 60 home runs in one season. That is a matter of conjecture. As for Gevinson, 5-ounce gloves certainly wouldn't do his opponents any good. But it still seems he should make 'em stay put when he floors them as hard as he does. The trouble, as we view the matter, isn't with the gloves, but Gevinson's tactics when he has his man in distress. He doesn't punch enough to the body, but keeps trying for the head and the smart boxers keep their heads out of range.

Has anybody seen Harry Raskin?

Ferrell to Change Catching Style for 'Hand Protection'

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Orlando, Fla., March 1.—Rick Ferrell, the Nats' No. 1 catcher, who suffered a broken throwing hand twice last season, is getting smarter.

Like Dickey, Ferrell plans to be a one-handed catcher next season. When no men are on bases he will keep his right hand discreetly out of harm's way and catch all pitches with his mitt, a la Dickey and Mickey Cochrane, who also was a "one-handed" catcher.

The only experienced catcher on the Washington squad, Ferrell has Bucky Harris' full permission to try the one-handed style.

The Nats' attempts to claim a veteran catcher have been in vain. Giuliana, of the Browns, who was placed on the waiver list a few weeks ago, was claimed by the Nats, but the Browns refuse to release him. Manager Harris will now scan the National League waiver lists.

Clark Bags 21 Points as Mates Bow.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Baltimore, March 1.—Held on fairly even terms by Wilson Teachers College of Washington during the first half and for a good portion of the third period, Johns Hopkins basketball team cut loose with a terrific drive in the last 10 minutes tonight to win, 59 to 37.

The invaders, offensively at least, were a one-man team and his name was Clark. Scoring six times from the floor in the first half and four more times in the second session and adding a free throw for good measure, Clark topped the players on both sides with 21 points.

The locals led, 23 to 17, at the half. Wilson Teachers got off badly after the rest period and Hopkins pulled away midway of the session but the visitors rallied and got the score to 35 to 31. Then the storm broke as Hopkins' pass work began to click and their shooters hit the basket. Wilson had nothing to stop the assault as the points rapidly mounted.

Fight Topped By Archibald

feature the second outdoor show of the year.

Archibald was scheduled to sail for Australia this week for a barnstorming tour, but Manager Goldman agreed to a cancellation on condition that Ahearn obtain Escobar for the title match. The Providence boy can easily make the bantamweight limit of 118 pounds. This fitted in perfectly with Ahearn's plans, as he was anxious to show the Puerto Rican in Washington.

Any one of the three men being considered as Archibald's opponent should wage a satisfactory fight with him. Al Reid might be a particularly pleasing opponent because of his style, but the others are just as tough and willing and would give Joey a rough ride. The fight presumably will be over a 10-round route.

And don't forget, Jack Dempsey will be the third man in the ring.

Benny Leonard Is Warned For Tactics as Second Here

Former Champion Faces Ban of N. Y. and N. B. A. Boards if Infractions of Rules Are Repeated.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

A solemn warning for infraction of the District boxing rules, politely but firmly worded, yesterday was forwarded Benny Leonard by the local ring body. No direct action was taken, but the epistle made it known that future violations of the code will result in his suspension.

The commission's action followed Leonard's continued coaching from the corner during the Eddie Dunne-Lou Gevinson bout. The former lightweight champion not only coached his boy, Dunne, but threw water on him as he lay prostrate on the canvas following a knockdown. It was an old ring trick which once saved Benny from disaster, and it saved his boy from a knockout.

In its own cute way the governing group mentioned the fact that if it was necessary to suspend Leonard the ban would stick in New York as well as States affiliated with the National Boxing Association. Leonard might laugh off an N. B. A. suspension, but that New York item would be a serious pain in the pants pocket. The commission's letter, verbatim, follows:

"Dear Mr. Leonard: During the progress of the bout between contestants Eddie Dunne and Lou Gevinson, the commission notes that when Dunne was floored you threw water on his face from the corner where you were functioning as Dunne's second.

"In this connection, your attention is invited to Article 44, which requires that seconds remain seated in place and silent during the progress of a round. This commission is very strict about the enforcement of this rule.

"In the past, violations of this rule have resulted in one warning to the second violating the rule. Please accept this letter as such a warning with the advice that another violation of this rule will result in your suspension.

"This commission is a member of the National Boxing Association and also has a working agreement with the New York State Athletic Commission. Very truly yours,

"ERNEST W. BROWN.
"Chairman."

Training Camp News

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 1 (AP).—The ranks of the New York Yankee holdouts were cut to three here today when Maj. Joe McCarthy announced at this morning's workouts that Frankie Crosetti, shortstop, and Spurgeon Chandler, right-handed pitcher, had signed their contracts. They are on their way to camp now, McCarthy was informed from New York.

Those members of the champions remaining unsigned are Joe DiMaggio, Lou Gehrig and Red Rolfe.

Jake Powell and Myril Hoag, outfielders, arrived this morning to join their teammates. Powell hopped into uniform and immediately participated in the two-hour drill. Hoag will start work tomorrow.

New York, March 1 (AP).—John (Buddy) Hassett, Brooklyn Dodgers' holdout first baseman, conferred for more than an hour with Geeral Manager Larry MacPhail today and took home two propositions to think about.

MacPhail offered him the same salary he received last year plus $1,000 if he plays in 100 games or a bonus of $2,000 if he participates in 130 games.

New Orleans, March 1 (AP).—The Mardi Gras reached its howling climax today and all but one of the Cleveland Indian rookies struggled through crowded streets to join the merrymakers.

Ken Keltner, who in two seasons jumped from the sandlots of Milwaukee to serious contender for regular third base duty with the Redskins, couldn't be bothered. He had to write some letters.

Keltner, before his first professional contract induced him to concentrate on baseball, played wing for an amateur hockey club, forward for an amateur basketball club and end for an amateur football team.

Keltner, only 21, was discovered by Manager Al Sothoron of the Brewers in 1935 and farmed out to Fieldale, Va., of the Bi-State League. He played left field and later third base for the Milwaukee Club last season. He fielded .938 at third and batted .310.

Tampa, Fla., March 1 (AP).—The Cincinnati Reds polished up their favorite war clubs today, incident to a call for initial batting practice of the training season. Manager Bill McKechnie scheduled the first fungo session tomorrow. Work so far has been confined to infield "pepper" hurling and routine tossing by the batteries.

Biloxi, Miss., March 1 (AP).—The Phillies will hold only one workout a day, Manager Jimmy Walker said today. The workout will be held in the morning, Wilson said. He decided to eliminate the afternoon practice because most of the players complained of leg weariness.

Avalon, Calif., March 1 (AP).—Sunshine displaced a siege of rain today and permitted the Chicago Cubs to romp through their first workout in three days. Pitchers in particular were instructed to bear down and Clay Bryant, Leroy Parmelee, Al Epperly, Clyde Shoun and Newell Kimball put stuff on the ball for the first time.

Chicago, March 1 (AP).—A squad of 15 Chicago White Sox players, including Catcher Luke Sewell, who came to terms today, departed tonight for Pasadena, Calif., where spring training maneuvers were scheduled to begin Thursday.

Baton Rouge, La., March 1 (AP).—Four young players, who were graduated from the Giants' one-month baseball school yesterday, joined the New York squad today for its second practice session.

Lake Charles, La., March 1 (AP).—A rookie third baseman from Detroit arrived in the Athletics' training camp here today and then wrote a letter to his parents announcing he was secretly married a month ago.

The rookie, Irving Bartling, a former Michigan State athlete, said he and Miss Romayne Boettger, of Scranton, Pa., were married last February 4. They met last November when she was vacationing in Detroit, he said.

Boys Launch Title Quests

106 D. C. Youths Vie in Golden Gloves Bouts.

A small army of prospective Jack Dempseys pulls on its debating mittens tonight and marches off to another ring war, the annual battle for District A. A. U. junior golden gloves championships. One hundred and six boys, representing nine clubs, are entered.

Georgetown Boys Club, defending team champion, will be host to the boxers tonight, with the first bout scheduled for 7 o'clock. Bouts are scheduled in all classes from 50 pounds to 130 pounds.

Striving to dethrone the current title-bearer are three Metropolitan Police Boys Clubs, American Legion Boys Club, of Colmar Manor; Boys Club of Washington, two branches; Merrick Boys Club, and Neighborhood House. Prizes are being donated by the District Boxing Commission, which also will conduct and supervise the bouts. The team winner will receive the Lucien Van Doran trophy, contested for annually.

Because of limited seating capacity at the various clubs admission will be restricted to club members, and parents of the boys competing. Tonight's pairings:

55 pounds, John Heiss vs. Arthur Reddill; 54 pounds, Malcolm Beall vs. Horace Highsmith; 53 pounds, Richard Beall vs. Pat Leary; 55 lbs., Louis Schwartz vs. John Sachs; 53 pounds, Monte Burns vs. Richard Janigian; 60 lbs., Buddy Moran vs. Russell Maske; 60 pounds, Martin Townsend vs. Joe Mallon; 59 pounds, Aloysius Schwartz vs. Bernard Barry; 62 pounds, Tom Graves vs. Mike Leary; 64 pounds, Fred Jordan vs. Clarence Brandenburg; 65 pounds, David Clinton vs. David Coakley; 66 pounds, Harry Ismer vs. John Mallon; 64 pounds, Charles Redmond, jr., vs. Richard Patterson; 112 pounds, Charles Farrell vs. William Strister; 110 pounds, Charles Robinson vs. Walker Leith; 110 pounds, Leonard Taylor vs. James E. February Rise Of Stocks Best Since Summer

Railroad Equipments Lead 6.4% Average of 100 Common Stocks.

New York, March 1.—In the best month's performance since July, the value of 100 representative common stocks appreciated $963,310,000, or 6.4 per cent in February, according to the monthly compilation of Frazier Jelke & Co., members of the New York Stock Exchange. The list had an appraisal at the end of the month of $16,164,654,000.

Railroad equipment stocks experienced the sharpest improvement on a percentage basis, gaining 14.6 per cent, while building shares ranked second with a gain of 13 per cent. Retail issues rallied 10.9 per cent and oils advanced 9.5 per cent.

The smallest improvement was shown in the motor group, which gained only 1.3 per cent. Foods and utilities remained repressed, rising only 2 and 2.1 per cent, respectively, while electrical equipments advanced 2.2 per cent. The steel group gained 3.7 per cent.

With the January appreciation of $175,000,000, the 100 stocks have recovered $1,138,000,000 of the severe loss sustained in five consecutive months of falling prices from August to December. This represents a rebound of 7.5 per cent from the year-end low.

Railway Income Drops Sharply

By the Associated Press.

The Association of American Railroads reported yesterday that class one railroads had net railway operating income of $6,919,879 in January, compared with $38,889,878 in January, 1937, and $54,645,698 in January, 1930.

The association said net railway operating income in January was at the annual rate of return of 0.49 per cent on property investment. This compared with 2.73 per cent in January, 1937, and 3.81 per cent in January, 1930.

Gross operating revenues for January totaled $279,258,713, compared with $331,672,343 in January, 1937, and $445,920,950 for January, 1930. This was a decrease of 15.8 per cent compared with the same month last year and 37.4 per cent compared with the 1930 month. Wheat Rises With Expected Soviet Demand

Advance in Stocks Also Stimulates Buying in Grain Pit.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, March 1.—Influenced by a reassuring trend of securities and by indications of new demand for wheat shipments to Vladivostok, wheat values scored moderate net gains today. Disclosure that a large part of the Chicago supply of wheat consisted of grades not of delivery character served also as a stimulus to price upturns of May wheat in particular.

At the close, Chicago wheat futures were ⅛-⅝ above yesterday's finish; May, 93⅝@93¾; July, 88¾@88⅞; corn, ⅛-⅝ up; May, 59¼@59⅜; July, 60⅝; oats unchanged to ⅛ higher; rye showing ¼-½ bulge, and provisions varying from 7 cents decline to an advance of 2 cents.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively

A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Advance Moderately in Light Trading; U. S. Government Bonds Firm; Wheat Higher.

New York, March 1.—Stocks recovered a point or so in the afternoon dealings, after a poor morning. Sales volume did not go much above half a million shares. Commodities were steady, and United States Government bonds forged ahead on Treasury financing plans for the next tax date. May wheat rose half a cent to 93⅝ cents a bushel.

After shaking off the despondency so pronounced yesterday and which left a hangover of irregularly lower prices in slack trading this morning, the stock market moved into the afternoon with a feeling of rising hope. That feeling was based on nothing more tangible than rumors of a much-delayed freight-rate increase for the railroads and on the assumption that, because some of his most intelligent and most experienced advisers are telling the country that the New Deal flood of "reforms," controls and whatnot are to blame for the business recession and are bound to keep the country in hard times, the President will change his course. If any change in course ever is to be made because of the industrial depression, it surely cannot be long delayed.

With spring at hand the depression is as bad as ever, and worse in some particulars, and the election is drawing nearer. Business is not going to spring forward automatically so long as the old checks to enterprise are applied. Either the barriers soon will be lowered, or we might as well settle down to a long period of harder times. Fortunately a slight beginning has been made to wear ship. The Federal Reserve Board has ended its deflationary policy. Proof of a new deal will come when, as and if the malicious taxes (chiefly the undistributed profits levy) are repealed, and when the big stick is no longer shaken at the public utilities and businessmen in general.

Rising on Hope.

Hopes for relief for the railroads were strengthened by the reports of rainfall in the Western wheat belt. The Santa Fe Railway reported much needed rains from Kansas to California and revised upward its prediction on the principal crops. Meanwhile retail trade lags and the slackness in manufacturing is bringing further cuts in employment, pay rolls, dividends and production. Department store trade in the New York district, the Federal Reserve Bank reports, fell 4.6 per cent below a year ago last month and failed to show a seasonal increase over January. Inventories were lower than a year ago, but remained above the level prevailing before "the rapid increase started in the latter half of 1936."

Nearly all stock groups hardened in the last hours, just as the decline yesterday spread throughout the trading list. Here and there a stock moved out of line under the influence of divided action or reports on profits, but moderate buying had an uplifting effect on the large majority. Thin markets gave a few stocks a nervous day. Johns-Manville was battered down on the opening sale of a few hundred shares. Metal shares were slow. American Smelting voted a reduced dividend.

Light sales put down 2 and 3 points the second and prior preferred shares of G. A. Fuller. Dow Chemical continued its climb into new high ground with a rise of about 6 points. Steel shares picked up a point. Chemicals were strong and motors ruled a point higher. Rails were pushed forward gently.

Banking Position.

The condition figures of the reporting member banks indicate no important changes last week in the credit picture. There was a $14,000,000 drop in commercial loans, of which $8,000,000 was in New York City. Brokers loans fell $16,000,000. Although New York banks added $4,000,000 to their holdings of Government securities, banks in other districts liquidated, the decrease for all banks being $13,000,000. Government guaranteed securities increased $6,000,000 here, but for all the reporting banks there was no change. Reserve increased $51,000,000 and cash in vault $33,000,000. Most of the $91,000,000 increase in demand deposits occurred in New York. Deposits of domestic banks dropped $65,000,000, mainly at interior cities. One of the interesting features of the member bank statement is the revelation that $10,000,000 of the $18,000,000 decrease in foreign bank deposits reported by New York City member banks last Thursday did not leave the country and was not invested. It merely moved to Boston, where banks appear to be making a bid for such money.

Treasury Financing.

The Treasury notes which mature at the tax date sold today at a premium of 1 9-32 points above par. Since a price of 100 6-32 is a no-yield basis, the big premium of 1 6-32d points above the no-yield basis certainly indicates the belief of banks and Government securities dealers in Santa Claus. The situation is one which forecasts a big premium on the securities which the Treasury will offer to refund the $455,000,000 maturity. Announcement that no new money, aside from the proceeds of bill issues and savings bond sales, would be borrowed caused the Treasury bond market to move ahead with vigor. Some issues established new records for altitude.

Dollars or Cents?

The SEC report on the hearings in the Kinner manipulation case, which has resulted in expulsion of Charles Wright from all stock exchanges, contains some interesting data on the details of the Kinner operation on the Curb Exchange. Under the heading "Kinner messages on Mervin Ash & Co.s TWK sheets for the 'markup' or active buying phase of the manipulation"—covering 1 hour and 21 minutes, beginning at 12:02 p. m.—it was shown that brokers wired the specialist's book to client placing the orders, that the client at one time, after buying several thousand shares and securing numerous reports of sales, with prices and quotations, suddenly broke in to ask, on being given a quotation of "46 at 47," "Is this price cents or dollars?" The answer was: "The price is all cents." After further purchases of a few thousand shares and more reports, the client seems to have been struck with another afterthought. He asked: "What will be commission on that Kinner?" He found out that he was putting the price rapidly into a higher commission bracket, for the answer was: "At 25 cents and under 50 cents commission is $1 per 100 shares; at 50 cents and under 75 cents, commission is $2 per 100 shares." On the brief report for the hour and 20 minutes the first report was: "You bought 700 at 46." The last report was: "You bought 500 Kin at 55." Pretty fair for the lunch hour.

Slump Costs 25,000 Jobs in Wall Street

New York, March 1, (AP).—Unemployment in Wall street—the Nation's money center—was discussed today by Charles R. Gay, president of the New York Stock Exchange and Richard Lewis, organizational director of the Financial Employes Organizing Committee, affiliated with the Committee for Industrial Organization. Employment in brokerage houses at the beginning of the year was reported 10 per cent under a year ago, and around 10,000 additional clerical workers in "The Street" are said to have lost jobs in the past two months, lifting the current number of Wall Street unemployed bank and brokerage workers to or around 25,000. In addition many brokerage house workers still with jobs have been subjected to the "Scotch week," under which every fourth week is worked without pay.

Seats Decline on 3 N. Y. Exchanges

New York, March 1 (AP).—Memberships in three of the financial district's most important exchanges changed hands today—all at declines from previous transactions—and one at a new low since 1935. Current small volume of financial business was generally accepted as the cause.

A membership in the New York Stock Exchange was sold for $67,000, off $3,000 from the last sale, but $8,000 better than the $59,000 brought by one on February 3, which was a 20-year low.

A membership in the Curb Exchange was sold for $12,000, a decline of $3,000 from the last transfer, and the lowest price paid for doing business in that mart since 1935, when one sold for that sum.

The sale of a membership in the commodity exchange, where business is confined principally to futures trading in basic raw materials, was arranged at $925, off $75 from the last transaction.

Fed. American Reorganized as American Co.

Plan Calls for Exchange of Stock; Directors and Officers Elected.

A charter has been issued under Delaware laws to the American Co., which company takes over the entire real estate and mortgage business of the old the Federal-American Co. Under an act of Congress the word "Federal" cannot now be used by any corporation formed after the passage of the act.

"This is in reality a reorganization of the capital structure, made necessary by the existence of a technical capital deficit, which situation prevented the old company from distributing any of its earnings, even to preferred shareholders, so long as that condition continued to exist," said John Poole, president, today.

The reorganization committee consisted of G. Thomas Dunlop and Dr. Charles Stanley White, representing the common shareholders and Herbert Corey and James M. Johnston, representing the preferred shareholders, and John Poole, as president of the company.

By vote of stockholders at a meeting yesterday final action was taken whereby all the assets of the old company were turned over to the new company, and all the liabilities of the old company assumed by the new company in exchange for all the preferred shares and all the common shares of the new company, 4,681 shares of each class.

Exchange Plan.

The plan provides for the issuance of one share of new preferred stock for one share of the old preferred, and the exchange of eight shares of the old common stock for one share of the new common.

The preferred stock is 5 per cent cumulative.

The capital and surplus of the new company will be as follows:

4,681 shares of preferred stock of the par value of $100	$468,100.00
4,681 shares of common stock of no par value, carried at $1 per share	4,681.00
Surpluus, approximately	225,000.00
Net worth	$697,781.00

The board of directors of the American Co. is as follows: John Poole, president; Charles G. Abbot, secretary, Smithsonian Institution; George W. Harris, president, Harris & Ewing, photographers; James M. Johnston, Johnston, Lemon & Co., investment bankers; Harry King, formerly King's Palace; Frank T. Mitchell, Allen, Mitchell & Co., machinists; Vernon G. Owen, Thomas J. Owen & Son, real estate appraisers and auctioneers; James Brown Scott, secretary, Carnegie Endowment for International Peace; Leon Tobriner, lawyer, Tobriner, Graham, Brez & Tobriner; L. Perry West, president, West Brother Brick Co.

At the organization meeting yesterday the following officers were elected: John Poole, president; Leon Tobriner, vice president and general counsel; John W. Fisher, secretary and treasurer; Nathan Poole, assistant secretary and assistant treasurer.

The new company will be located in new offices on the ground floor of the Southern Building at 807 Fifteenth street northwest.

Cotton Lower; May 9.10 Cents

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 1.—Cotton was heavy today under liquidation, hedging and some Bombay selling. May reacted from an opening high of 9.22 to a closing low of 9.10. Final prices were 7 to 11 points net lower.

The market opened with near positions steady on trade buying and later deliveries lower under moderate liquidation. A decline at Bombay and a further widening of the discount of that market under New York attracted considerable attention and Bombay offerings here. There were partial afternoon recoveries but when renewed Southern selling appeared, early buyers resold.

Ill. Central Plans To Revamp Board

Chicago, March 1 (AP).—L. A. Downs, president of the Illinois Central system, announced today that headquarters of the board of directors would be transferred from New York to Chicago.

"The principal offices of the Illinois Central system are in Chicago," Downs said, "but meetings of the directors have been held in New York because most of the directors have had their own offices in New York. On the other hand, men of affairs from Chicago and elsewhere along our system lines whose services we would like to have as directors have not been available because of the sacrifice of time that would be required to attend board meetings in New York.

"We have decided, therefore, to increase the board from 12 to 15 members, in addition to the Governor of Illinois, who is an ex-officio director, and to elect a number of new directors from along our system lines. A majority of the enlarged board will be drawn from the territory in which the Illinois Central system operates."

Help of Banks To Create Work Asked by Jones

Financial Co-operation With Industry Urged by R. F. C. Head.

By the Associated Press.

Jesse H. Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, asked the Nation's bankers yesterday for "wholehearted co-operation in meeting every legitimate demand for credit that induces employment and produces wealth."

In a letter released at RFC headquarters and addressed to banks and bankers throughout the country, Jones emphasized the desirability of making industrial loans that will increase employment.

"Many industrial loans," he said, "are good that are not necessarily desirable for a bank, because payment of the loan will depend too much on the profitable operation of the borrower. This is the type of loan we would like the co-operation of banks in making, where employment will be provided, and the security will reasonably assure ultimate liquidation of the loan.

"Our banking laws permit such loans, and bank examiners need not and should not criticize or call special attention to them.

"Borrowers need to have definite maturities that they can hope to meet, very much longer than has been the custom in commercial banking.

"The small units in business and industry comprise the major part of it and loans that will give employment even for a few people will stimulate business and relieve the Government relief rolls to that extent."

Jones' letter followed President Roosevelt's recent announcement that the RFC would resume making business and industrial loans out of the $1,500,000,000 fund at its disposal.

Reasons Given For D. C. Poverty

A lack of tradition of public responsibility for aiding the needy was given as a chief reason for Washington's severe poverty problem by Dr. Francis W. Perkins, of the Universalist Memorial Church, in an address before Government employes at the Federal Community Chest Forum at Child's Restaurant on Pennsylvania avenue yesterday.

"The principles of public responsibilities were written into the earliest statutes of most other communities," he said, "but Washington never has really accepted them."

"Thousands of families in this city today are in the most dire destitution," he said, "and until we care for them we have left undischarged a human, civic and social responsibility."

Hearst Art Collection Will Be Put on Sale

New York, March 1 (AP).—The New York Times says the monumental art collection of William Randolph Hearst will be broken up.

Joseph V. Connolly, president of King Features, a Hearst enterprise, confirmed reports that objects from the collection were being offered for sale privately, the Times says.

Ruling Expected Today on Pension Aid to Oklahoma

The Social Security Board will decide today whether to refuse further Federal grants to Oklahoma.

For more than nine hours yesterday the board examined testimony taken in a two-day hearing last week in which board investigators produced evidence that at least $685,000 had been irregularly spent in the State.

The board debated approval of plans of the State welfare commission for cleaning up a situation in which politics was admitted to have caused old-age pensions to be given to many ineligibles while many needy were without assistance.

Soil Checks Sent To Pennsylvania

Harrisburg, Pa., March 1 (AP). Pennsylvania farmers watched the mails today for their share in $3,500,000 in Federal subsidies on soil-building crops in 1937, while pondering a warning from the AAA that payments would be slashed this year if they went over allotted harvests.

Sixty thousand of the State's 191,284 farmers planting three acres or more are sharing the $3,500,000, the Federal office and State Department of Agriculture reported. The State Department said 71,000 farmers entered the Federal program last year.

Foreign Markets.

By the Associated Press.

London, March 1.—Trading in today's stock market continued on a small scale and after an easier tone in the early dealings, prices rallied from their low prices. Transatlantic issues were off fractions to a point and home rails were heavy. Industrial shares were mixed with steels, tobaccos and rayons in supply. Oils and mining issues sold at lower levels, while British funds and rubbers remained quiet.

Paris.—Price movements were mixed in the bourse and industrial shares showed fractional changes in both directions at the close. Suez Canal lost 145 francs and Bank of France issue was down 50. Rentes finished 35 centimes lower to 5 higher. International securities were heavy.

Liverpool.—Wheat futures rallied after selling off about a half penny and closed ¼d up to ⅛d net lower, following firmness in the March contract. Cotton futures reacted near the close when local traders sold following earlier Bombay prices, and the market was unchanged to 1 point down at the finish. Early trade centered in liquidation of March contracts.

MEN

I don't care what your past work or earnings have been. I am not worried about your education, your religion, or your nationality.

I am interested in how ambitious you are and how willing you are to work and study, to qualify for the kind of weekly and monthly earnings being made by men already connected with my organization.

You may be employed now but starving for lack of opportunity. You may be out of work and in need of employment. However, if you have been out of a job for more than six months, I doubt if you are the kind of man who can hold down the position I have to offer.

It will cost you nothing to investigate this ad and I cannot tell whether you could qualify in our line which is outstanding in its field, unless I can talk with you. Come in for a preliminary interview on Thursday afternoon, 1:30 sharp at 205 Denrike Bldg., 1010 Vermont ave. nw.

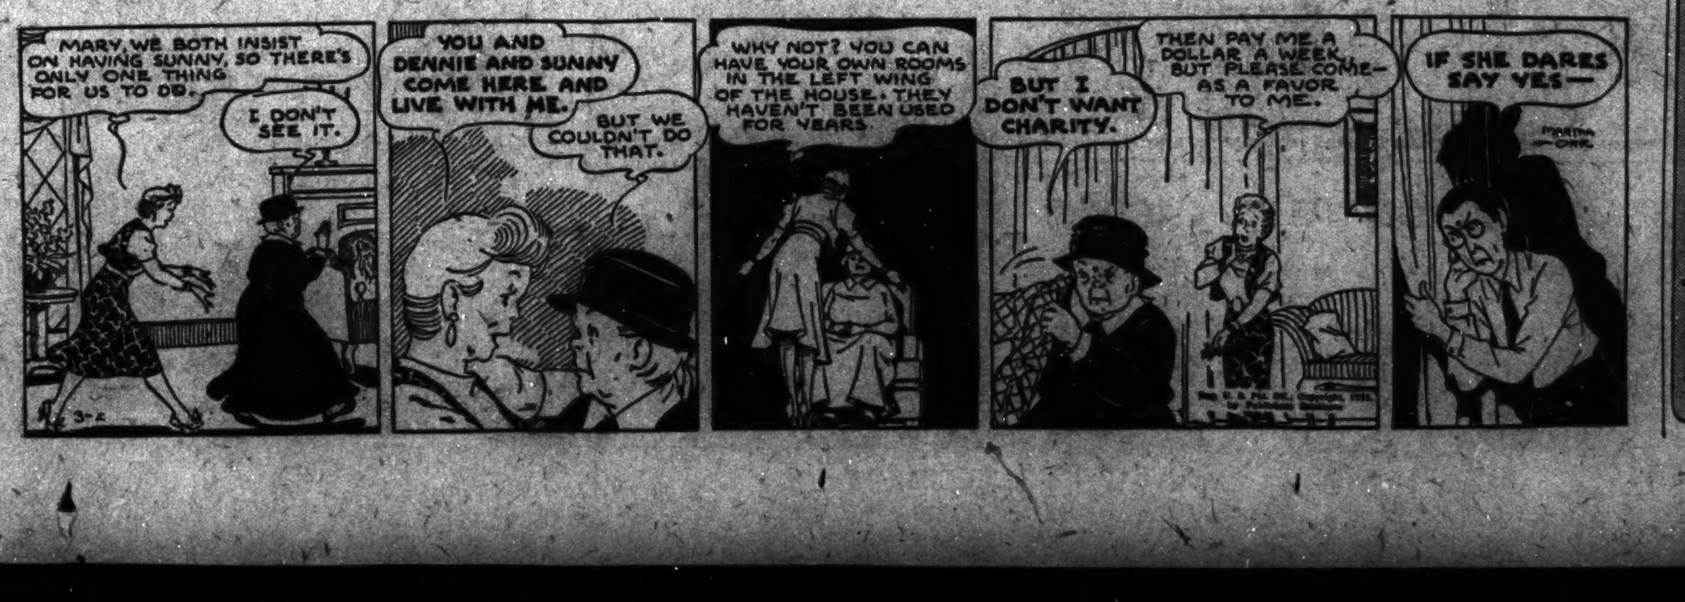
APPLE MARY By Martha Orr



MARY, WE BOTH INSIST ON HAVING SUNNY, SO THERE'S ONLY ONE THING FOR US TO DO.
I DON'T SEE IT.
YOU AND DENNIE AND SUNNY COME HERE AND LIVE WITH ME.
BUT WE COULDN'T DO THAT.
WHY NOT? YOU CAN HAVE YOUR OWN ROOMS IN THE LEFT WING OF THE HOUSE. THEY HAVEN'T BEEN USED FOR YEARS
BUT I DON'T WANT CHARITY.
THEN PAY ME A DOLLAR A WEEK, BUT PLEASE COME— AS A FAVOR TO ME.
IF SHE DARES SAY YES—
MARTHA ORR

Bob Burns Says—

I think one of the greatest "unsung" heroes in the world is the Hollywood picture director. Half the time when an actor gets praised by the public for a great piece of acting, it's the director who should really get the credit.

The other day I had to make a scene where I hadt'a show intense sorrow and pain. At the finish of the scene the director shook hands with me and says "That was great! The pain you showed in your face was real!" I says "I know, but there was a big tack in my shoe."

The director says "I know—I put it there!"

Federal Gets Most Customers Of Old Fidelity

Successor to Loan Firm Retains 80 Per Cent of Investors.

Nearly 80 per cent of customers who went to 610 Thirteenth street northwest, yesterday, home of the new First Federal Savings & Loan Association, subscribed to shares in the successor to the old Fidelity Building and Loan Association, officials said at close of the first day of business.

Only a few depositors were on hand when the bank opened at 9 a. m. The first person in line, A. H. Royce, 1239 Maryland avenue northeast, a depositor in the Fidelity, arrived at the bank at 7 a. m. Royce had about $47 in the Fidelity institution and got back about $40.

The new bank, first of its kind established in Washington under authority of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, paid off 85 per cent to shareholders of Fidelity—the final dividend for depositors of the defunct bank.

Harry P. Sommerville, president of the First Federal, received congratulations of Howard Acton, of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, and other members of the financial section of the city, who wished the new organization success.
